HONOR GUEST BECOMES THE ACCUSER

BITES HAND THAT FED HIM ASSUMES ROLE OF INFORMER

Brigadier General Smedley D. Butler, lately in charge of Philadelphia's Police Force, and who after a hectic campaign failed to achieve results, now turns up at San Diego, California, trying to clean up the Navy.

Coronado, Colonel Williams married Miss Marie Thompson, a noted Kentucky beauty. Major General Wendell Neville, commanding the department of the Pacific, marine corps, with headquarters at San Francisco, was best man at the wedding.

General Butler was not at the marine post Wednesday. It is understood that after filing the charges with Admiral Robertson he left for San Francisco to confer with General Neville.

RADIO FANS WILL TUNE IN ON PROGRAM

Brigadier General Smedley D. Butler, who topped off his war record as a "devil dog" to fight vice and liquor in Philadelphia, as head of the police there for two years, continued his crusade against drink at San Diego, California, when he filed charges of drunkenness and conduct unbecoming an officer against Colonel Alexander Williams of the San Diego marine base.

General Butler's action followed a dinner given Saturday evening at Colonel Williams' home in Coronado in General Butler's honor. Cocktails, it is said, were served at the dinner, which was attended by a number of officers of the marine corps and their wives. It is said that General Butler made some comment regarding the cocktails. The charges against Colonel Williams, however, were based on a party which was held later at a hotel in Coronado, all of those at the dinner having been invited.

General Butler's charge was sent Wednesday to Rear Admiral Ashley D. Robertson, commanding the Eleventh Naval district. Admiral Robertson said he would send the charges to Washington for final action by the navy department.

Several affidavits accompanied the charges. General Butler and some other officers declared in the affidavits that Colonel Williams was intoxicated. Other affidavits declared he was not. It was said at Eleventh Naval district headquarters that regulations require the affidavit of a navy physician in such a case. No such affidavit had been filed at district headquarters, it was reported.

Colonel Williams was placed under technical arrest at the hotel and was summarily removed from command of the Fourth Regiment of Marines to which command he reverted when General Butler relieved him as commander of the marine base a few days ago.

Should the navy department take cognizance of General Butler's charges and order Colonel Williams tried by general court-martial the board, it is announced, will convene either at district headquarters in San Francisco or at the marine base.

The board, under the law must comprise no fewer than five nor more than 13 officers, all of them, except the recorder, senior to the officer being tried.

Colonel Williams has had a long and distinguished career in the marine corps.

He was born in New York City August 25, 1877, and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the corps October 12, 1899. During the world war he commanded the Haitian gendarmerie with the rank of major general. He is a graduate of the naval war college at Newport and of the navy school of the line at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. He assumed command of the Fourth regiment when it arrived from the Dominican republic August 25, 1924.

Long Beach Oil Fire Spectacular, but Costly

Two workers were injured and property valued at $1,000,000 was destroyed when a spectacular fire followed a gas blast in the Long Beach (Cal.) oil fields. The blast came two hours after a new well had been brought in. Every available piece of fire-fighting equipment in Long Beach was rushed to the scene. This picture shows a general view of the fire.

THE CHAPTER OF RED CROSS IN PICKAWAY

Organization is Doing Good Work in Relieving Many Cases of Distress.

Just as the sun stirs the seed to a response which prompts it to push thru the encasing obstacle, the earth, but also to use that very earth for the sustenance of life, so Home Service brings the men in tune with their environments. Thru Pickaway county chapter hospitalization was obtained for six World war veterans and one Spanish American war veteran. In the case of one of the World war veterans his condition is so improved that he now is night orderly in one of the new wards in the hospital at the National Home, Dayton, for which he receives a small salary.

Mental and tubercular cases, whose source is the terrible experience of men in the service in the World war, arouse the most profound sympathy and in these cases the work of the chapter speaks for itself. Home hygiene, care of the patient, and nutrition, especially in tubercular cases, are receiving careful consideration and attention in order to be helpful not only to the afflicted family but to the community. In obtaining hospitalization, the Red Cross is endeavoring in every way to cut down the woeful sacrifice of life to this disease.

In February the chapter was successful in obtaining compensation for a veteran, who will receive $80 a month until such time as the Veterans' bureau sees fit to amend the award. One veteran's claim was received and his compensation re-instated and one widow's claim was allowed. Two of these cases were in Circleville and one in Saltcreek township. In the past month 34 cases were under observation. These cases involved ten visits to homes of claimants and twenty-five reference visits. Sixty-two letters were written in the interest of these claims and 41 received. Visits were made in and around Circleville, Ashville, South Bloomfield and Williamsport.

Heroism at Sea Has Its Rewards

Some of the gifts presented to Capt. George Fried and crew of S. S. President Roosevelt. In the center is the silver loving cup presented by the King of England. At right and below the cup is a silver flashlight given Capt. Fried. To left of cup is a gold watch, a gift to Capt. Fried from the Associated Press. At extreme right and left are scrolls presented respectively by the City of New York and the State of New Jersey.

ALL the world loves a hero. When the steamship President Roosevelt, of the United States Lines, sailed from New York for Plymouth, England, on her latest voyage, she carried with her a veritable museum of gifts from the mightiest and the humblest people of two continents—gifts which will memorialize for all time the Roosevelt's rescue of the officers and men of the British freighter Antiope.

A silver loving cup from the King of England, pennies from the school children of New York, a gold watch from the Associated Press, a silver cigarette case from Captain Tose, of the ill-fated Antiope, a Navy Cross presented to Captain George Fried, of the Roosevelt, by the President of the United States, a scroll from the City of New York and another from the State of New Jersey, four silver flashlights presented by one of the largest manufacturing companies in the United States—these and many other tokens of the love that the people of the "Old World" and the "New" have in their hearts for pure heroes, were borne by the Roosevelt. And some of them will be on display in a special trophy room of the famous ship as long as she sails the seas. When the proud vessel is no longer fit for the tremendous battle against wind and wave, these trophies will be given a permanent place of honor by the United States Line.

Great Gifts and Small

Some of these presents, of course, were personal gifts to the brave Captain Fried and his officers and men of the President Roosevelt. Some of them, too, were gifts of the generous American people to members of the crew of the storm-conquered Antiope. The gifts of money, totaling thousands of dollars and raised by free will offerings of the dollars of the well-to-do and pennies of the poor in New York City, will be devoted first to relieving the needs of relatives of the two men who lost their lives in the rescue work. Master-at-Arms Uno Whanen and Boatswain's Mate Ernest Heitman, both of the President Roosevelt, and second to rewarding the personal bravery shown by the Roosevelt's boat crews, under First Officer Robert Miller.

Story of the Flashlights

The four silver flashlights which are among the valued trophies of the rescue that thrilled the whole world, are mementoes of a remarkable incident in the picturesque modern drama of the sea. One of them bears the name of Arthur Evans, radio operator of the Antiope, and is a special gift from Captain Fried to that resourceful young man who, when the Antiope's radio failed, maintained contact between the two vessels during four terrible nights by blinking Morse code messages with a small flashlight. Captain Fried is taking this handsome and powerful new flashlight, which throws a clear, white beam a distance of 500 feet and which can be seen in signal work from a distance of more than six miles, to Plymouth, to be presented to Evans there.

The other three silver flashlights, each suitably engraved, are gifts

Capt. Fried is here shown with two powerful silver flashlights, suitably engraved to commemorate the rescue of the crew of the Antiope. One of these hand searchlights is a gift to Capt. Fried from the manufacturer. The other is Capt. Fried's gift to Arthur Evans, radio operator of the Antiope.

of the manufacturer who built them especially for Captain Fried, First Officer Robert Miller and Fourth Officer Frank Upton, of the President Roosevelt. Upton, it will be recalled, was in charge of the Roosevelt's radio and picked up the wireless messages which brought the Roosevelt plunging through the storm to aid the stricken Antiope. It was Upton who also maintained signal contact with Evans on board the Antiope during these four howling nights when only the blinking dots and dashes from Evans' tiny flashlight assured the officers and men of the Roosevelt that the starving, half-frozen and helpless seamen were clinging with a last desperate hope to the battered hulk that had been their proud ship.

Unsightly Homes Disappear As Better Homes Campaign Progresses In United States

AN excellent "before and after" study is afforded by this house in Danville, Kentucky. The left hand picture shows the unsightly three-room house, with ugly surroundings, which was taken in hand by the Danville Better Homes in America committee and made into an attractive, livable, small home.

The central aim of Better Homes in America is to help American families of limited means to a knowledge of the ways in which they can make the most of their homes, from the standpoints of comfort, beauty, and utility.

This community—one of two thousand that took part in Better Homes Week in 1925—has nished an excellent example of co-operation, local merchants contributing much of the material necessary to furnish this run-down house and transform it to the condition shown in the right hand picture.

Not only materials, but labor as well, were donated to the Danville Better Homes committee, men with trucks from five local garages grading the grounds.

In furnishing the house, the committee kept strictly in mind the income limitations of a family that would occupy it, and the house was attractively furnished despite the rigid limitations on costs.

So much interest was aroused in this conditioned little house that 600 persons were registered as visitors during Better Homes Week last May. Danville's population is less than 6,000.

Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, is president of Better Homes in America. Dr. James Ford is executive director and in active charge of the campaign.

Plans are already under way throughout the country for the Better Homes demonstrations of 1926, which will take place during the week of April 25 to May 1. While during 1925 two thousand cities, towns and rural communities took part in the demonstrations, representing every state in the Union and Alaska and Hawaii as well, it is probable that this number will be considerably surpassed in 1926.

WASHINGTON SPECIALS

Washington, March 9.—(UP.)

The government's chain of evidence tightened today around Daniel J. Shields, representative of the Johnstown, Pa., Brewery Company and Major James F. Johnson, former special counsel, for the litigation division of the prohibition unit.

The men are on trial under an indictment charging conspiracy to defraud the United States by the issuance of a permit for the Johnstown company to manufacture beer and for attempting allegedly to bribe prohibition officers.

E. C. Yellowley, former head of the prohibition division, Elmer L. Irey, of the special intelligence unit, Burt W. Andrews and W. E. Dunigan, operators, were called to the stand to testify for the prosecution.

Control of the Virginian Railway, one of the major coal carrying roads, by the Norfolk & Western was opposed today by the state of Virginia on the grounds that it would give virtual control of the West Virginia coal fields to the Norfolk & Western. The C. & O. railroad should be permitted to acquire the Virginian railway, the Interstate Commerce Commission was told by the corporation commission of Virginia in a brief filed today. The merger of the Virginian and the C. & O. properties was suggested by the commission in its tentative plan of railroad consolidation.

The Erie Railroad today applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to issue $2,190,000 equipment trust certificates bearing 4½ per cent interest for purchase of additional rolling stock. The Erie plans to purchase two locomotives and 124 new coaches at a total cost of $2,747,627.

Shortly after Chairman Borah of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had voiced in the Senate today a defense of the Mexican government, the state department this afternoon revealed it had instructed Ambassador Sheffield to use his good offices in mitigating Mexican deportation of American religious teachers.

Wets and drys staged a turbulent debate in the senate today over propaganda issued by both sides. Senator Bruce, Maryland, wet Democrat, started the exchange when he read results of newspaper polls showing an overwhelming majority for light wines and beer. Senator Willis, Republican, Ohio, retorted he had tons of dry propaganda in his desk, and would unload it into the record unless wets stopped their practice of putting newspaper stories into the record.

President Coolidge, through his spokesman, today decided to discuss the proposed Great Lakes to the Sea canal, referring questions to his last message to congress which mentioned the project. In the message, the president pointed out that a joint commission of Canada and the United States were studying plans for this project and that any action on the project must be under treaty. He characterized all waterways development as an "important adjunct to commerce."

Farm Societies Have Weaknesses

Every Director Must Feel That He Has Accepted Position of Trust.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the serious weaknesses of many agricultural co-operatives is the tendency of members of boards of directors to shirk responsibility in the matter of management.

"Too frequently," says the United States Department of Agriculture, "the individual member looks upon his elevation to the office of director merely as a recognition of his standing in the community. Such an attitude is unfortunate and until every director comes to feel that he has accepted a trusteeship for the successful conduct of the business, co-operative enterprises will fail of attaining the full measure of success they wish to achieve."

Every Director Obligated.

This trusteeship, say the department, obligates every director to inform himself thoroughly respecting the operations of the business with which he has become vitally connected. In addition he will need to understand fully the broader principles upon a thorough working knowledge of which depends, to a large extent, the degree of success and progress of the business.

"If lack of interest is a weakness," says a department economist, "the wrong kind of interest is equally bad. Too frequently one finds the board interfering instead of directing. It is the duty of the board to formulate policies and to see that these policies are carried out by the executives. Dictation by the board of the petty detail of day to day operation is not formulating policies. It is interference. Such interference can only result in unstable and unsatisfactory management."

Unwise Management.

Probably the most frequent cause of unwise management, he points out, is a lack of essential facts, or if these be at hand, an unwillingness to face the facts. To the extent that the board of directors makes a real effort to understand the demand for its products, and to formulate price and merchandising policies on the basis of all the facts, rather than on the basis of mere opinion, he says, will its activities contribute to whatever measure of success is achieved.

Opinion That Silage Is Not Fit Food for Bulls

The opinion that silage is not a fit feed for bulls that are heading herds prevails quite generally.

Whenever a sire becomes impotent one of the first questions asked is: "Do you give him silage?" This has led many to fear the feed like poison, far as the bull is concerned.

In view of this the experience of Prof. W. J. Fraser, head of the department of dairy husbandry of Illinois College of Agriculture, is enlightening. Professor Fraser says: "I have fed Holstein bulls 40 pounds of silage a day with no serious result in any way, when they were worked night and morning on the tread power. I think the amount of silage that can be fed depends entirely upon the amount of exercise the bull gets. If he stands around all the time the silage should be limited, or he will get too large in the barrel and too logy."

To Exclude Fruit Stock

The Department of Agriculture has indicated that it will confirm the recommendations made last summer by nurserymen and horticulturists to restrict the importation of fruit and rose stocks. In making these recommendations the nurserymen's statement includes the suggestion that the members of the association should heartily co-operate with the American growers of seedling fruit stocks and rose stocks in their efforts to organize and develop production to the extent that it may be reasonably depended upon as an adequate source of supply.

Plowing Under Clover

There are various opinions as to the best time for plowing under sweet clover. Some think it is best to let it grow until late April or May before plowing under. One will get more value out of sweet clover to plow it early in the spring before growth has started. Its fertilizing value at this time is mostly in the roots and quite deep in the ground. After growth has been made by late April, the clover has about the same fertilizing value.

Benefits of Mulching

Mulch for strawberry beds serves four important purposes, viz: (1) Preventing alternate freezing and thawing in late spring or when the winters are open. (2) It keeps down the weeds between the rows. (3) It conserves moisture, and the berries need all they can get at time of ripening. (4) It prevents the fruit from being soiled or splashed with sand or earth at the time the fruit is ripening.

New Males Each Year

Many poultrymen follow the practice of obtaining new male birds each year. They will trade their own males for inferior ones just for the sake of introducing new blood. Such a practice is entirely unnecessary and makes constructive breeding impossible. If your flock is giving satisfactory results, select and use the best male of your own raising.

ARRANGEMENTS

Under Way For Party For Benefit of Soldiers.

Nothing is to be left undone by the American Legion Auxiliary to make the house warming party which they have planned for the 9th of April at Memorial Hall, a wonderful success. The regular meeting of the Auxiliary was held Monday evening in the Post Room and plans were discussed but nothing in the way of definite plans were completed at this meeting because of the absence of Mrs. A. A. Parrett, the president, who has been confined to her home because of a serious attack of La grippe. In her absence, the meeting was presided over by Mrs. Chas. Smith, 1st vice president.

A letter was read to the Auxiliary from Mr. T. S. Pattison, commander of the Ross County Post in acknowledgement of the invitation extended to that Post by the local Post and Auxiliary, to the party which was a sample of the wonderful enthusiasm for which the Ghillicotheans are noted. The letter was written from Grant hospital, Columbus, where the Major is convalescing from a recent operation.

Mrs. A. I. Cahill, as president of the Auxiliary in Ross County, also acknowledged the invitation very graciously and promised to co-operate with the local members in every way.

It was also announced at the meeting that a committee had called upon Mr. Jose Hedges and Mr. Albert Cromley, of Ashville, in regard to the date that a club from that village had set for a dance to be held here that would conflict with the date set by the Auxiliary and reported that their mission had been very successful. Both men had fully agreed to make other arrangements and to attend the party for the benefit of the soldiers.

This date having been set by the Auxiliary for some time it was also called to the attention of the Unit last evening that a dance scheduled by the C. A. C. for that date had been postponed for their benefit. This is very gratifying to the Legionnaires and members of the Unit who are working so hard to make this party one of the memorable events in the history of Circleville.

The tickets are now printed and can be secured from any member of the Auxiliary or Legion. They are for the very nominal price of 50 cents for which a whole evening's entertainment may be procured. The large Post Room which has been newly decorated, will be used for the card tables and the auditorium will be reserved for the dancers.

Make your plans to attend this celebration and assist those who are striving to help those who cannot help themselves—the ex-service men and their families.

FORECASTS ON NATIONAL GAME

(By Henry L. Farrel, United Press Staff Correspondent.)
St. Petersburg, Fla., March 9.—The New York Yankees are undergoing a process of thorough re-organization at their training camp here.

Such progress is being made that Miller Huggins already is willing to venture the opinion that he has the makings of a first division club this year while the players—particularly Babe Ruth—are certain they have such a team already.

The Babe, in better condition than he has been for years, thinks that the Yankees will be back into the world's series after two years on the outside looking at the Washington Senators perform.

Huggins does not like to hear pennant talk around the training camp.

"Confidence is to be desired," Huggins said, "but it isn't well to feel too sure. We learned that during the last two years."

BANK BANDITS UNDER ARREST

Dayton, March 9.—(UP).—Three men, suspected of an automobile theft arrested here early today were identified at noon as being the men who held up and robbed the Lockland, Ohio, bank last week.

Identification was made by the cashier and teller of the bank and by a young woman who witnessed the robbery.

The suspects gave their names as Carl Leheil, 21, of Middletown; Max A. Richardson, Hamilton, and Charles J. Bailey, 21, Middletown.

On the strength of the identification the prisoners will be turned over to the authorities from Lockland. All three deny connection with the robbery.

"WHITE METAL" HOAX IS UPSET BY TESTS

Bureau of Mines Finds Claims Unsubstantiated.

Washington. — The mysterious "white metal" which many mineral prospectors in the West consider to have strange properties of hardening iron and steel when heated in contact with those materials, has no existence in fact, states the bureau of mines, Department of Commerce, following repeated experiments with purported specimens of metal submitted for examination.

There is a legend that Mexicans and other old settlers in the southwest knew of an "ore" which was packed around pieces of iron and steel that they wished to harden. The metal was heated in a wood fire in contact with the "ore" and then quenched in water. Axes of springless wagons so treated were said to have been made "glass hard" and to wear two or three times as long as ordinary axes, and tires so treated were described as "ringing like a bell" when suspended and struck with a hammer. This action was said to be due to a "white metal" that was extracted from the "ore" and alloyed with the iron by the treatment.

The tests by the bureau and other laboratories, following the claimants' procedures, usually have shown no hardening effect, although in a few tests some hardening of iron or steel was produced due either to case hardening from heating the metal in contact with carbon, protected from oxidation by a coating of flux, or in some instances to the formation of a crude silicon alloy. Many ordinary fusible rocks, and even fluxes without rock, will give these same results.

The bureau of mines is forced to conclude, therefore, that the various unsubstantiated claims that have been made were due to careless tests, to erroneous conclusions from these tests, or to an attempt to defraud.

The Golden Legend

It was in 1851 that the poet Longfellow published "The Golden Legend," a long lyric drama based on the German Hartmann von Aue's beautiful story of self-sacrifice, "Der Alme Heinrich." It is one of Longfellow's best and the most popular of his longer works, and contains many passages of great beauty.

HONOR HEROIC INDIAN WOMAN

Ask Government for Monument to Sacajawea, Who Guided Lewis, Clark.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Neglected, on a bleak plain in Wyoming, lies the grave of the Indian girl Sacajawea whose guidance enabled President Jefferson's expedition under Lewis and Clark to blaze a trail to the Pacific and make known the vast riches of our Northwest territory. Representative Winter, who has written a book about her, has asked the federal government to appropriate money enough to mark the grave of this Shoshone whose service was not less devoted though less celebrated, than that of Pocahontas.

Sacajawea saved the explorers from being wiped out by redmen, piloted them from midcontinent to the sea with a papoose on her back, gave her beads to buy them furs against the cold, rescued their instruments, records and supplies from the rapids where they had capsized—yet never was rewarded or recognized except by a monument at Portland and one at Bismarck. For his part in the guiding and interpreting her French husband, Charbonneau, received but $500.

Long afterward Captain Clark sent a message to Charbonneau, saying: "Your woman who accompanied you on that long, dangerous and fatiguing route to the Pacific ocean and back deserved a greater reward for her attention and services on the route than we had in our power to give her at the Mandans (Fort Mandan)."

Beaten by Charbonneau, Charbonneau, (east of all, appreciated her intelligence, resourcefulness and pluck, as, carrying her papoose, she retraced the path into the mountains which she had traversed as a captive five years before. He was jealous of her instinctive sense of direction, which threatened to rob him of the glory he wanted for himself as guide. In the Lewis and Clark journals there is a note by Captain Clark, made on August 14, 1805, which says: "I checked our interpreter for striking his woman at their dinner."

Sacajawea accepted her lot with placidity and humility. She was, after all, privileged, in her own estimation, to be the wife of a white man. As a child of ten she had been separated from her people, the Shoshones, when they were attacked by their ancient foes, the Minnetarees or Blackfeet. She had been yanked up on a horse by one of them and with nine other boys and girls prisoners carried from her home on the Snake river in Idaho, eastward over the Bitter Root (Rocky) mountains into Dakota land.

Save for her friend, Otter Woman, Sacajawea (meaning Bird Woman) was the only one who continued in captivity. The others escaped one night when the guard was asleep. Sacajawea might have fled, too, had not Otter Woman slept so soundly. Roughly and suddenly awakened, Otter Woman screamed in fright, and this aroused the Blackfeet.

A Gambling Stake. In the lodge of Red Arrow, her captor, and his wife, Sacajawea became content. She grew to love them—and also a Mandan lad. But when Red Arrow lost her in a gambling bet with Charbonneau, a French trader, she was compelled to leave the Arrows and dwell with Charbonneau. He forbade her to marry the Mandan and after the death of his wife married her himself. Sacajawea had never opposed a dominant force. It was not until the advent of more white men that loyalty to them gave her sufficient strength to assert herself.

Snowbound in the Mandan village (near the present site of Bismarck), Captains Lewis and Clark sought a guide and interpreter to lead them to the coast. Charbonneau, after promising his service, accepted a more lucrative offer from some traders. But the explorers had won the interest of Sacajawea. They were bound in the direction of her people, and Charbonneau had given his word. Why was he so perverse?

For the first time in her life Sacajawea allowed her black eyes to flash in anger. She told Charbonneau that he had no word of honor, that unless he let her accompany him to Long Knife and Red Hair (Lewis and Clark) she would—yes, she would destroy herself and Batiste, the son born that winter.

Charbonneau then agreed that he would keep his word. Ecstatically she tripped on her beaded moccasins to the tent of Long Knife and Red Hair to impart the news. They laughed and told her she was a clever girl. From that moment she could hardly wait for the river ice to break that they might proceed westward in their canoes. The explorers were just as anxious to meet the Shoshones as was the Indian girl, for they afforded the only possibility of procuring horses to complete the journey to the coast.

After a hazardous course the party reached the Great falls of the Missouri, where they were nearly drowned. While admiring the falls, a dark cloud arose. They entered a ravine for refuge. When the cloud burst the water mounted to Captain Clark's waist. He pushed Sacajawea—who was carrying her papoose on her back—up a cliff, climbing to safety after her as the water sprang up fifteen feet behind him.

Once Sacajawea, then only twenty, fell ill. Through forbidding caverns and dangerous currents she had finally come to—the valley of the shadow—Captain Clark sent his black servant York, to nurse her. With a sympathetic skill he slowly guided the Indian girl back to the paths of health. She soon had the privilege of repaying Red Hair. When her husband allowed his boat to tip, so that the incoming water washed overboard many records and packages of camp stores, she sprang into the stream to recover them. Captain Lewis, seeing the accident from the shore, feared for her on account of the treacherous state of the water. Risking her life and that of her baby, she retrieved the supplies. For her heroic act, which made it unnecessary to retrace hundreds of miles to replenish supplies, the captains agreed to name the next creek after her, Sacajawea.

Found the Right Pass. Her main service to the explorers and to posterity was performed when in a labyrinth of the Bitter Root mountains, recognizing the route she had been hurried over as a captive she pointed out the right pass to the coast. Through dark, narrow portions of the Missouri they plied their paddles, canyons on either side letting in rifts of light, odors of pine and the roar of waterfalls.

"We are coming to a country where the river has three forks," said Sacajawea.

And they did. Only July 25 they arrived near the present site of Gallatin. At this point, where all Indian trails converged, where the roads were worn with the lodgepoles of Indian hunters, Sacajawea recognized the camping ground of her own people by its green valleys, sunflowers and wild rye. Here was the fork up which she had run to hide from the Minnetarees. Here they would meet the Shoshones and obtain horses.

Captain Lewis went ahead, eager to find a Shoshone. Presently one approached on horseback. But when he espied the explorer he whirled about to warn his tribesmen that the Blackfeet were returning. Lewis was dismayed. The Shoshones would either abandon their grounds or in revenge for past mistreatment rally for war.

White Men in Danger. Lewis beckoned to Sacajawea. The red men were approaching, she would have to interpret. She was joyously plouetting up the river shore, waving her arms, kissing her fingers. Up rode the chief of the Shoshones. Beholding him, Sacajawea threw her blanket over him and burst into tears. It was Camenhwait, her own brother.

Sacajawea learned that the remainder of her family had been slain by the Minnetarees, but that her sister had left a little boy. Having established an understanding between her people and the white captains, she told her brother he could secure his tribe against the onsets of the Blackfeet tribe by exchanging his horses for the guns of the explorers.

Camenhwait agreed. But no sooner was he in possession of the weapons than he decided he needed his horses, too. Sacajawea informed him that he couldn't have his pie and eat it. The Shoshone chief explained that he could. He had already sent for reinforcements to the surrounding tribes. The white men were defenseless; they could be killed and the horses regained.

The distressed squaw tried to dissuade her wily brother from that course. It would be to his advantage to befriend the explorers, she argued, because they were making a trail for other white men, who would bring more guns to kill the Blackfeet. Camenhwait would not wait. The Blackfeet must die now; so must the white men.

Once again Sacajawea's natural submissiveness was overpowered by her fidelity to her new white friends. With bowed head she bared her brother's plans to Red Hair. Then, womanlike, she modified the reprimand which Captain Clark asked her to interpret to Camenhwait. She also tactfully padded the chief's apology.

Another difficulty now presented itself. Charbonneau refused to continue further on the journey. He could only foresee Indian attacks and starvation further west. Sacajawea would not desert the white men; no, not even to abide with her people; Charbonneau had promised to take them to the Everywhere-Salt-Water and must do so.

Their subsequent encounters with Indians were, thanks to her presence, amicable. No squaw ever traveled with a war party, and Sacajawea and her papoose, seeing the world over his mother's shoulder, were such a pleasant picture that the Indian women everywhere gathered about them with interest.

Their destination was reached on November 14, 1805. They spent the winter at Fort Clatsop by the sea in comfortable cabins. Batiste, the papoose, could now be untied from his elkskin cradle to toddle on the puncheon floor. Sacajawea, crooning an Indian monotone, helped Charbonneau with the cooking.

One day the camp heard a whale had come ashore. Captain Clark appointed twelve men to be ready before daylight for the jaunt over Tillamook head to see it. Sacajawea was eager to accompany them. But Charbonneau wishing her to attend to the "Tapaiois" (roasting meats on a stick), told the captain "she ought not to go." Returning, he informed her that the captainne say you cannot go.

Sacajawea wouldn't accept the decision. She had spoken much for the captain, why not now for herself?

"Captainne," she said to Clark, "you remember w'en we reach de rivers and you know not which to follow, I show de country and point de stream. Again w'en my husband could not spik, I spik for you. Now, Captainne,

I travel great way to see de Beeg Water. I climb de mountain an' help de boat on de rapide. An' now dis monstrous fish haf come—"

Sacajawea was irresistible. Next morning she was ready before any of them. On Tillamook Head she first saw the Everywhere-Salt-Water, flinging its waves over the Tillamook rock.

In the spring the party started on the back track, Sacajawea leading the way through the Rockies (via Bozeman pass) on her little pony. When they came again to the Mandan country Captain Clark invited her and Charbonneau to visit the white man's land. Sacajawea yearned to go, but Charbonneau declined.

Thus ended the services of the little Indian maid to exploration. For 100 years she was all but forgotten, until, at the Lewis and Clark centennial in Portland, Ore., in 1905, Clark's diary references to her were verified and a statue was erected to her. Another was set up at Bismarck, N. D. "But these are only local monuments," said Representative Winter, "Sacajawea deserves recognition from the general government."

Some years ago a controversy arose as to whether the Sacajawea who was buried in 1884 in the Wind River cemetery was the Sacajawea of the Lewis and Clark expedition. Conducting an investigation, Dr. Grace Raymond Hebard of the University of Wyoming, and, later, Dr. Charles A. Eastman of the Indian bureau at Washington, verified the fact. Rev. John Roberts of the Shoshone reservation, to which Sacajawea had returned after her husband's death, testified that he, among others, remembered her. She had died at Shoshone agency, was one hundred years old, and "spoke excellent French."—New York Times.

BROTHERHOOD MEETING.
The Ashville Brotherhood was royally entertained by Trinity Lutheran Brotherhood Tuesday evening, March 9, in the social room of the church. After the devotional and business meetings an excellent buffet lunch, prepared by Mr. Daniel Eitel and ten able assistants, was enjoyed by the 150 present. At this time the meeting was turned over to George Griffith, toastmaster, for the evening. Mr. Griffith introduced Karl Hermann whose subject was, "Telling the People What They Ought to Know." Mr. Hermann having made a study of advertising gave some excellent pointers along this line.

Next was a vocal selection by Christian Schwarz. Elmer Wolf then challenged anyone in either of the brotherhoods for a debate on any subject. John Goeller Jr., accepted the challenge, choosing the subject and taking the negative; Resolved, "That the Old Lady who lived in the Shoe was justified in spanking her children and putting them to bed hungry."

While the debaters were preparing their notes for the debate a duet was rendered by Gladden Troutman and George Himrod. The debate followed resulting in negative two votes and affirmative one.

Another vocal selection by Ed. Ebert. The next speaker Ed. Sensenbrenner, took for his subject "Praise." The climax of the entertainment came with an address, "Failures and how to Avoid Them," by Rev. Mr. Glick, of Ashville.

The next regular meeting will be held Thursday, March 18.

Precocious Sarcasm

Mrs. John T. Pratt, New York's first alderwoman, told a Christmas story at a dinner party.

"A young father and mother," she said, "were hard up last Christmas so they bought their little son a rather cheap lot of presents."

"When he came into the sitting room and saw his presents on Christmas morning he said nothing—just studied them over, one by one, coldly and silently."

"Well, little man," said his father, "what have you got to say for all these beautiful, lovely, splendid presents that Santa Claus has brought you?"

"The little man thought a minute. Then he said:

One of the Two Seats
By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

"MOTHER, I think it's too disgusting the way those people flock to the tennis tournaments. I have tried all over London and can't get a single seat for the finals, and it's one of the reasons I chose to come here for my holidays—I did so want to see Lenglen and Miss McKane and Miss Ryan and all the bunch of champions at Wimbledon."

"There, there, dearie," consoled her mother. "I have tried to get a word in edgewise and tell you that I have just found in the Personal column—I always read the personals, they are so amusing—one which offers two seats for sale for the games."

"Oh, mother, shall I dash straight off to get them? You will come, too, won't you?"

"Now, Molly, you know I would pass right on if I had to sit through a tennis match in a crowd of several thousands."

So Molly rushed off to the first taxi she saw and on to the address of a flat in Upper Brook street in quest of the ticket.

Arriving there and being admitted she found that the young man who had got there one minute before her had the tickets in his hand and was even then producing the necessary two pounds.

"Oh," wailed Molly, looking straight into the young man's blue eyes. "I've come all the way from America to see one of these great games and now I can't get a single seat."

"I say, that's rotten luck. Here, you have one of these. One is all I want." He told the yarn easily.

She drew a pound from her neat bag and took the ticket with a smile that sank to the very depths of the young man's heart. Also with American frankness she held out a slim hand and colored slightly at the warm pressure it received as she tried to thank him.

Molly felt she could hardly wait until the day she dressed her prettiest to go to Wimbledon.

Her heart sank down into her very dainty boots when, upon finally reaching her seat in the center court, she found that what she had been hoping was not to be. There was no nice young man with blue eyes beside her, but a young lady whose attitude as Molly sat down was not in the least cordial.

Molly realized that this was the other of the two seats, for on her left side was a large party of some eight or ten, so the aristocratic young lady must be the friend of the very nice young man.

"I'm so sorry," she said with appealing friendliness, "that I took this seat—the gentleman who had it told me he only wanted one, and now I know he gave it up. I wish I could get it back to him. I believed him when he said he didn't want it."

Lady Sybel Hove looked frankly at Molly. "My brother would say that," she told her. "He has been looking forward to seeing this set for months, but he said he would edge in somewhere. Please don't feel so badly," she added swiftly for Molly looked so distressed that Sybel's heart smote her. "A man can always make his way in."

Half an hour later when the greatest of world tennis champions were hard at play on the courts, Lady Sybel and Molly were clutching each other in excitement and munching chocolates alternately.

When the exciting games were over and the thousands of good-natured people swarming to the various exit gates, Lady Sybel turned to Molly.

"You will come for a cup of tea, won't you? Jack will be delighted to have a chat with you. He and I are taking a long trip over to your country this autumn and you must tell us all about what to see."

Molly blushed shyly and accepted happily.

There was no slightest doubt as to Lord Hove's delight when he realized that Sybel had succeeded in what he hoped, without having asked her, she would do. She had become acquainted with the girl whose green eyes he had not been able to forget since they had gazed into his own.

The second meeting was even more wonderful than the first and no one looking at Molly and Lord Hove could think anything save that they were suddenly, desperately and most happily in love. Sybel saw it right away and wondered what color her bridesmaid's gown would be.

And when the great ocean liner nosed into the dock in New York a scant month later the photographers were all there to snap the arriving bridegroom and the bridesmaid as they met the bride.

Would Lord Hove, or would he not, kiss his bride-to-be?

That was what the newspaper men wondered.

All the Sunday editions would tell the answer—one way or the other.

Food of Ostriches

Ostriches are by nature herbivorous. On ostrich farms the birds are usually pastured on alfalfa in the summer and fed alfalfa hay, wheat bran, barley, oats and corn in the winter. Of course they require grit. Ostriches are notorious for their voracious appetite for stones, gravel, granite and pieces of bone. They have been known to swallow pocketbooks, spectacle cases, watches and other similar objects. As a rule they do not care for flesh of any kind unless real hungry.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Bubbles Indicate Leak
Air bubbles seen in the radiator solution indicate some sort of cylinder head gasket leak. The bubbles are the result of compression leaking out around the head and getting into the cooling system. This air, being under pressure, naturally finds its way to the surface of the water in the radiator.

AMUSEMENTS

"A new Marion Davies," tersely describes the artistry of that charming star in her later stellar production, "Lights of Old Broadway," directed by Monta Bell, and now playing at the Met theater.

Beginning with her production of "Little Old New York," it may be rightly said that each succeeding production has been another step upward in the career of this artist. In "Lights of Old Broadway," which tops by a considerable margin "Little Old New York" Miss Davies has attained a stellar position which will command the respect and admiration of the great American picture-going public.

In this picture she plays the dual role of Fely, foster daughter of the lowly O'Tandys, and Anne, adopted daughter of the rich and aristocratic De Rhondos—roles as far divergent as far as the poles, yet she interprets them with ease and clarity.

The writer of this article has followed the career of Miss Davies from its inception and has noted that her histrionic greatness has always been as great as the vehicle in which she has appeared. If Miss Davies, under her new contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is given stories with the strength of her initial picture under that banner, it is most likely she will soon top all other feminine stars of the screen.

She carries herself thru all scenes with the ease and naturalness of a born artist. There is nothing forced nor anything artificial about her work and without doubt she is the most beautiful of all American girls now connected with stage or screen life.

Great as the credit due Miss Davies in "Lights of Old Broadway" is, we should not miss the opportunity of speaking of Monta Bell's clever direction and the well-knit scenario made from Laurence Eyre's stage success, "The Merry Wives of Gotham" by Carey Wilson.

Credit should be given to the supporting cast, especially her leading man, Conrad Nagel and Frank Currier who plays the role of Col. Lambert De Rhondo. Others who deserve special mention are George K. Arthur, Charles McHugh, Eleanor Lawson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Mathew Betz and Wilbur Higby.

x HARTMAN THEATER. x
x x x x x x x x

"The Student Prince" the most sumptuous operetta ever produced by the Messrs. Shubert and considered the crowning musical achievement of a decade, will begin a week's engagement at the Hartmen theater, Columbus, Monday night, March 8, at 8:15. It will be remembered that when this fascinating musical play was presented here earlier in the season an extra matinee had to be given to accommodate the crowds wishing to witness it.

The company that will present the operetta is the Chicago cast and chorus which has been playing at the Great Northern theater for more than a year and is headed by Dixon Frasier, the well known tenor in the role of the prince, and Eileen Van Biene, popular prima-donna in the role of Kathie. Other well known artists in the cast are Eddie Garvie, Patricia Ann Manners, Georgie Mack Evelyn Darville, Walter McNally, Ann Carey, Otis Sheridan, Charlotte Granville, Walter Tenny, James Phillips, Clyde Moffet, John Goldsworthy, Timothy Daley, James Murray and others of note. The famous male chorus and the charming altos and sopranos all go to make up an organization of more than 125 trained singers.

It will be recalled that the story is about the young Prince Karl Franz, who is sent away to Hendeberg for a year of study, only to be recalled to Karlsburg and the throne upon the untimely death of his aged grandfather, the king. In the meanwhile he has fallen in love with Kathie, a pretty waitress at the Inn of the Three Golden Apples, and altho his troth is pledged to the Princess Margaret Alexis, his cousin, whom he eventually marries, he never forgets Little Kathie, and in one of the sweetest and most touching scenes ever written, he goes back to the Inn looking for the sweetheart of his student days, but finds she is engaged to wed another. The thrilling, soul-stirring musical score by Sigmund Romberg has never been equalled.

Matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday afternoon at 2:15. Mail orders now.

Unfolding of Genius

A man's genius is always, in the beginning of life, as much unknown to himself as to others; and it is only after frequent trials, attended with success, that he dares think himself equal to those undertakings in which those who have succeeded have fixed the admiration of mankind.—Hume.

No Theaters in Java

In Java there are no theaters to speak of, and entertainments that call for an auditorium usually are given in large concert halls, the performances opening at 9:30 or 10 o'clock, because it is too warm prior to that hour to ask an audience to assemble. The concert halls are connected to clubs usually.

Great Writer's Nickname

The name "Great Unknown" was given by James Ballantyne to Sir Walter Scott, the author of the Waverley novels, which, although published anonymously, attained great popularity. Speculation was long rife as to the authorship of these romances; but it was not until the failure of Scott's publishers in 1825 that the secret finally was made known.—Exchange.

MUSEUM IS ESTABLISHED WHERE CZAR WAS SLAIN

Bloodstained Room Where Royal Family Was Murdered Preserved by Soviet Government.

Sverdlovsk, Siberia.—The Bolshevik government has converted the house in which the emperor and empress of Russia and their family were murdered into an historical museum. Part of the building now is a small Communist "university." The former dining room of the imperial family has become a reading room, where scores of proletarian students pore over newspapers and scientific books.

In the basement is the blood-stained bullet-pierced room in which the royal family were killed. It has been preserved as an "historical reminder of the just fate that befell the autocrat of all the Russias."

A section of the floor, is torn up, the Kolchak troops having, it is said, attempted to remove traces of the crime. Visitors are told that after the murder, white soldiers washed the floor and distributed the suds to the clergy, "priests having waited for hours in long lines for their share of the water containing their former imperial master's blood."

Visitors must have special permission. Some Americans recently were refused entrance on the ground that foreign visitors had written matter hostile to the Bolshevik regime.

Outside the house, which overlooks the "Square of National Vengeance," is a marble pedestal on which stands a headless statue of Karl Marx. The statue was "beheaded" by Kolchak's troops in 1918.

Having Tea With Kate

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

SATURDAY luncheon had consisted of very, very thin soup, with a few very small croutons—and there wasn't much in the plates, either. Then there had been midget fish balls—one to a person—short rations of bread and butter—plenty of pickles, weak tea and—that was all. Roderick Hemstead, who occupied one of the front rooms on the second floor of the fine old-fashioned house had come home early, in time for luncheon, and intended to spend the afternoon working over some papers from the office. He had dropped in for luncheon, to which he was certainly entitled since he paid full board. Nora Lane was home, too, though on school days she bought her luncheon at a little tearoom near the school where she taught.

Now Roderick sat in his room considering his papers, but much more seriously considering how hungry he was. He'd go out and get some afternoon tea if it wasn't such an infernal nuisance. And he didn't even have a cracker in his room. Nora had been correcting papers, but it seemed now as if she couldn't correct another unless she had something to eat.

Starvation fare—that's what it was at Mrs. Miller's boarding house.

Just then came a curious timid sort of scratching noise on Nora's door. "It's me," said a voice, as Nora opened to see an oldish woman in a blue gingham dress. Nora knew at once that this was Katie, the cook, though she had seen her only a few times. Students came in to serve the meals—and this Mrs. Miller considered a great advantage since you never had to feed them. And Mrs. Miller and Katie and poor timorous Mr. Miller did the rest.

"I thought maybe you'd come to the kitchen for a cupful of tea," suggested Katie. "Lunch was none too hearty." She laughed a little and waited for Miss Lane to accept her invitation. "You see Mrs. Miller is away. Won't possibly be back until after dinner tonight. I always have my tea and toast at four, and I thought I'd see if there was anyone in that would like some."

So Nora Lane, feeling as guilty as a child about to pilfer the pantry, followed the broad-backed Katie to the kitchen below. Steps on the back stairs following them proved to be those of Roderick Hemstead, who sat across the dining room from Nora. She knew his name, thought him very good looking, and that was about all. "This young gentleman was working in his room," explained Katie. "I knew that meal would never last him through the afternoon."

Katie was now setting tea cups and saucers and spoons on the immaculate white oilcloth top of her kitchen table.

A half-hour had passed when Nora and Roderick groped their way up the back stairs.

"Wasn't it fun?" asked Nora.

"You bet," said Roderick.

"And it isn't as if we weren't entitled to the things, either," defended Nora. "We both pay full board and we are hardly ever here for luncheon. Wouldn't Mrs. Miller have a fit?"

"That's what makes it such good sport. Wish I sat on the same side of the dining room that you do."

"Why?" asked Nora, also glad of the dark.

"Guess why," said Roderick, for they were now in the light of the upstairs hall and Roderick didn't dare say more.

Frequently that winter Mrs. Miller had engagements on Saturday afternoon and for some reason Katie always found her young man and her young lady, as she called them, in their rooms, ready to be asked to a kitchen tea party.

Then came the final kitchen tea party, to which Roderick and Nora came looking so confused and self-conscious that Katie felt sure that Roderick had stolen a kiss on the back stairs. Never was a tea party more delightful, and Katie was in rare good humor. Perhaps they were too preoccupied. Anyway they did not hear the footsteps of the ample Mrs. Miller coming through the pantry.

"Katie," she shrieked, "what do you mean by this? How dare you? I discharge you on the spot!"

Katie and Nora looked helplessly at each other and Roderick, who had risen, bowed slightly to his landlady. "Let me explain," he said. "We have been making arrangements—Miss Lane and I—with Katie to come and keep house for us. But perhaps I had better explain. Miss Lane and I are engaged. We shall settle in our own house immediately after our wedding." Nora blushed and nodded an affirmative to the bewildered Katie.

"How dare you conspire to get my cook away from me, right here in my own house?" shrieked Mrs. Miller.

"That's just it. As a matter of fact we hadn't spoken of the matter to her. We were going to. But we felt a little reticent about making advances here, as you say, in your own house. But since you have already discharged Katie, of course we need no longer feel any such scruples. Katie, do you accept our offer?"

Katie said she did. And there was a decided coolness between Mrs. Miller, her cook, and two of her best-paying boarders until the three last named left two days later.

Carpets of paper yarn are being introduced in this country.

Lesson for March 14

THE LAST WORDS OF JESUS WITH HIS DISCIPLES

LESSON TEXT—John 14:1-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—"I am the way, the truth and the life."—John 14:6.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Tells of the Heavenly Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Wonderful Promises of Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Counsels and Confers with His Disciples.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ's Last Words With His Disciples.

The hopes of the disciples were utterly shattered when Jesus told them about the cross. He had told them that He was going away and they could not follow Him. Their hearts were flooded with grief. He consoled them by—

I. Pointing to the Reunion in the Father's House (vv. 1-3).

1. He Asked Them to Trust in Him Even as God (v. 1).

Faith in the God man Christ Jesus will steady the heart no matter how intense the grief, nor how great the sorrow.

2. He Informed Them That He Was Going to the Father's House in Heaven to Prepare a Home for Them (v. 2).

He assured them that there was abundant room for all. Heaven is an eternal dwelling place. Only those can enter who have made the necessary preparation here.

3. He Assured Them That He Would Come Again and Escort Them to Heaven (v. 3).

Jesus will not wait for His own to come to Him, but will come and call forth from the grave those who have died and transform living believers and take them all to be with Himself in the heavenly home forever more.

II. Revealing the Way to the Father's House (vv. 4-11).

Jesus informed the disciples that they knew the place and the way to which He was going. To this Thomas interposed a doubt, in answer to which Christ asserts that He is—

1. The Way to God (v. 6).

He is more than a mere guide or teacher; He is the way itself. He is the door of the sheep fold; yea, the very entrance to the tree of life.

2. The Truth (v. 6).

He is not merely the teacher, but the Truth incarnate. In His incarnation the spiritual and material worlds were united. Therefore, every line of truth, whether spiritual or material, converges in Him. No one can ever have the real truth about anything who does not have Christ. In Him especially we have the truth about God.

To pretend to know God, while at the same time rejecting Jesus Christ is utter folly. Only as Christ reveals God can man know Him (John 1:18).

3. The Life (v. 6).

Christ is not merely the giver of life, but He is the essence of life. Only those who receive Christ have life in the true sense. This is a truth which cannot be arrived at by intellectual processes. It is a mystery which can only be penetrated by faith.

III. Assuring Them That His Work Was to Continue (vv. 12-14).

Jesus' going away was not to end the work which He had begun. This no doubt means that through the ministry of the spirit-filled disciples the work which He had begun would assume larger proportions. After the Day of Pentecost the Gospel took a much wider range. During His ministry the message was confined to the Jews, while under the ministry of the disciples it was only limited by the world itself. The disciples' ministry was ushered in by the conversion of three thousand in one day.

IV. Promises Another Comforter (vv. 15-17).

The word "comforter" means literally one called to the side of another to give help, protection and deliverance. This comforter was the Holy Spirit. Jesus was the comforter while here in the body. The Holy Spirit was to be another comforter.

V. Assuring Them of His Return to Them (vv. 18-24).

Although Christ went away He did not leave His disciples as orphans. He is spiritually present with them always. The Father and the Son make their abode with the disciples who love and obey Jesus Christ.

VI. Assuring Them That the Holy Spirit Would Aid Them in Remembering and Understanding His Word (vv. 25, 26).

This the Holy Spirit does by illuminating the minds of the disciples.

VII. Giving the Legacy of His Peace (vv. 27-31).

By His peace is meant the serenity of soul which one enjoys who knows that his sins are forgiven.

Dependent Upon God

All men, whether they know it or not, are unconsciously dependent upon God, else no man could live out a day. The religious man is one who is aware of that truth, and who seeks by active choice and will to know and do the will of Him in whose great hand he stands.—Joseph Fort Newton.

Unkind Language

Unkind language is sure to produce the fruits of unkindness. That is, interfering in the bosom of others.

Statistics

Secretary Mellon at a Washington reception said of a sensational statistician:

"His figures are so amazingly precise that you incline to doubt them. He's like the sugar planter in Hawaii who took a tourist to the edge of a volcano and said:

"That crater, Dick, is just sixty thousand and two years old."

"And two!" said Dick, with a laugh.

"Where do you get the two?"

"I've been here two," said the planter. "It was sixty thousand when I came."

SEEKING WAY TO STOP LEAK OF ELECTRICITY

Engineering Foundation Research Agency Tells of World Study of Insulation.

New York.—A world study of insulation, to solve problems that have proved baffling since the beginning of the electrical era, is under way, it was announced here by the Engineering Foundation, research agency of the national societies of civil, mining, mechanical and electrical engineers.

The work is being directed by the research committee of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, one of the member societies of the foundation and of the National Research Council. The chairman is Prof. John B. Whitehead of Johns Hopkins university.

"Leakage of electric current from generators, motors and other kinds of equipment, from transmission lines and from wiring, and the kindred losses by short circuits and 'break-downs,' total a large value every year," said the foundation's announcement. "The higher the voltage, potential, pressure or tension (electrical engineers use all four terms) the greater the leakage.

"High voltages, however, offer great advantages in many uses of electricity, and so inventors and engineers are constantly trying to find means for using current at higher and higher voltages for transmitting power to great distances and for other purposes. But with high voltages leakage, short circuits and break-downs cause danger of fire, injury or death to persons, besides loss of current and wrecking of lines and machinery; hence a great deal of the energy devoted to improvement of electrical equipment of all sorts is directed toward the prevention or reduction of these troubles.

"Insulation is the general name applied to means for preventing or reducing the escape of electricity from the place of use or storage or from the intended channel of transmission to a place of lower voltage. Just as water goes down hill, electricity goes down voltage. Insulation is almost as various in form and nature as the uses to which electricity is put."

OLD FIDDLERS CONTEST WAS INTERESTING

Capacity Audience at C. A. C. Gym—Another Will be Held in Near Future.

The Old Fiddlers' contest staged at the C. A. C. Wednesday evening drew a capacity audience. Three hundred and fifty people paid admission.

The old tunes of younger days fell on the ears of the audience and brought back scenes that were dear to the heart. Airs long since almost forgotten that we used to enjoy at country dances on the old barn floor and in homes that have long since passed into to discard. The old-time fiddlers made music worth while. "Turkey in the Straw," "Pop Goes the Weasel" and other old-time tunes which accompanied the ancient and funmaking hoedown that used to be danced when we were boys. "Home, Sweet Home" was not played until midnight and then some of the boys and girls wanted to linger longer.

Scottches, polkas, waltzes, quadrilles, lancers, Virginia reels, and all the old graceful dances that at one time were indulged in before the World war and then some.

The tinkling persuasive rhythm of the violin players made the audience long to dance before the contest was over. It is queer what old-time music will do. It fires the blood and makes you young again. This fact was proven when a number of the old iron gray haired sightseers just ached to get on the floor and trip the light fantastic. This, they were given a chance to do after so long a time.

Those who entered the contest were Frank Rodgers, Harry "Tug" Wilson, George Griffey, Clarence Melson, Walter Grant and Ed. Vandegriff, of this city; C. V. Harden, of Millersport; Wilbur Harden of Logan and F. A. Bradley, of Columbus.

The prize winners were: First, Edward Vandegriff, $20 suit of clothes, given by Rothman's department store; second, C. V. Harden, of Millersport, $10; third, F. A. Bradley, of Columbus, $5.

The prize for the best lady quadrille dancer went to Mrs. Ida Malone, who received a mahogany clock from Brunner's jewelry store.

The callers for the square dances, known as quadrilles were Emanuel Dresbach, Carl Porter and Charles Scott. Another contest is scheduled for the near future at the C. A. C.

30 YEAR BONDS

Are Offered By Mellon In Financing Plan.

Washington, March 8.—An offering of $500,000,000 in 30-year bonds was announced today by Secretary Mellon in connection with the regular March financing program of the treasury.

The new bonds will bear interest of 3 1/4 per cent and are intended, with balances already on hand and the March tax receipts, to meet the retirement of almost $750,000,000 in outstanding loans, for further cash requirements until June; when further financing will be necessary.

This is the first issue of long term securities offered by the treasury in a year, and the interest rate is lower than on any government bond issued since before the war with the exception of the first Liberty bonds, which were wholly exempt from taxation.

The new bond issue will be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from federal, state and municipal taxation except as to estate or inheritance taxes and to federal income surtaxes.

Applications for the bonds will be received at federal reserve banks.

Commenting on the lower interest rate treasury officials today said it reflected merely the general market rates. It was pointed out that the rates of government bonds always have been fixed to conform to the general market.

The bonds will bear interest from March 15, maturing March 15, 1956, and are redeemable after March 15, 1946. They will be offered at 100 1/2 and the $615,000,000 in the treasury notes of series A-1926, maturing March 15, will be accepted in part payment but will not receive

Organization is Doing Good Work in Relieving Many Cases of Distress.

Just as the sun stirs the seed to a response which prompts it to push thru the encasing obstacle, the earth, but also to use that very earth for the sustenance of life, so Home Service brings the men in tune with their environments. Thru Pickaway county chapter hospitalization was obtained for six World war veterans and one Spanish American war veteran. In the case of one of the World war veterans his condition is so improved that he now is night orderly in one of the new wards in the hospital at the National Home, Dayton, for which he receives a small salary.

Mental and tubercular cases, whose source is the terrible experience of men in the service in the World war, arouse the most profound sympathy and in these cases the work of the chapter speaks for itself. Home hygiene, care of the patient, and nutrition, especially in tubercular cases, are receiving careful consideration and attention in order to be helpful not only to the afflicted family but to the community. In obtaining hospitalization, the Red Cross is endeavoring in every way to cut down the woeful sacrifice of life to this disease.

In February the chapter was successful in obtaining compensation for a veteran, who will receive $80 a month until such time as the Veterans' bureau sees fit to amend the award. One veteran's claim was revived and his compensation re-instated and one widow's claim was allowed. Two of these cases were in Circleville and one in Saltcreek township. In the past month 34 cases were under observation. These cases involved ten visits to homes of claimants and twenty-five reference visits. Sixty-two letters were written in the interest of these claims and 41 received. Visits were made in and around Circleville, Ashville, South Bloomfield and Williamsport.

Heroism at Sea Has Its Rewards

Photos Bain News Service

Some of the gifts presented to Capt. George Fried and crew of S. S. President Roosevelt. In the center is the silver loving cup presented by the King of England. At right and below the cup is a silver flashlight given Capt. Fried. To left of cup is a gold watch, a gift to Capt. Fried from the Associated Press. At extreme right and left are scrolls presented respectively by the City of New York and the State of New Jersey.

ALL the world loves a hero. When the steamship President Roosevelt, of the United States Lines, sailed from New York for Plymouth, England, on her latest voyage, she carried with her a veritable museum of gifts from the mightiest and the humblest people of two continents—gifts which will memorialize for all time the Roosevelt's rescue of the officers and men of the British freighter Antiope.

A silver loving cup from the King of England, pennies from the school children of New York, a gold watch from the Associated Press, a silver cigarette case from Captain Tose, of the ill-fated Antiope, a Navy Cross presented to Captain George Fried, of the Roosevelt, by the President of the United States, a scroll from the City of New York and another from the State of New Jersey, four silver flashlights presented by one of the largest manufacturing companies in the United States—these and many other tokens of the love that the people of the "Old World" and the "New" have in their hearts for pure heroes, were borne by the Roosevelt. And some of them will be on display in a special trophy room of the famous ship as long as she sails the seas. When the proud vessel is no longer fit for the tremendous battle against wind and wave, these trophies will be given a permanent place of honor by the United States Line.

Great Gifts and Small

Some of these presents, of course, were personal gifts to the brave Captain Fried and his officers and men of the President Roosevelt. Some of them, too, were gifts of the generous American people to members of the crew of the storm-conquered Antiope. The gifts of money, totaling thousands of dollars and raised by free will offerings of the dollars of the well-to-do and pennies of the poor in New York City, will be devoted first to relieving the needs of relatives of the two men who lost their lives in the rescue work. Master-at-Arms Uno Whanen and Boatswain's Mate Ernest Heitman, both of the President Roosevelt, and second to rewarding the personal bravery shown by the Roosevelt's boat crews, under First Officer Robert Miller.

Story of the Flashlights

The four silver flashlights which are among the valued trophies of the rescue that thrilled the whole world, are mementoes of a remarkable incident in the picturesque modern drama of the sea. One of them bears the name of Arthur Evans, radio operator of the Antiope, and is a special gift from Captain Fried to that resourceful young man who, when the Antiope's radio failed, maintained contact between the two vessels during four terrible nights by blinking Morse code messages with a small flashlight. Captain Fried is taking this handsome and powerful new flashlight, which throws a clear, white beam a distance of 500 feet and which can be seen in signal work from a distance of more than six miles, to Plymouth, to be presented to Evans there.

The other three silver flashlights, each suitably engraved, are gifts

Capt. Fried is here shown with two powerful silver flashlights, suitably engraved to commemorate the rescue of the crew of the Antiope. One of these hand searchlights is a gift to Capt. Fried from the manufacturer. The other is Capt. Fried's gift to Arthur Evans, radio operator of the Antiope.

of the manufacturer who built them especially for Captain Fried. First Officer Robert Miller and Fourth Officer Frank Upton, of the President Roosevelt. Upton, it will be recalled, was in charge of the Roosevelt's radio and picked up the wireless messages which brought the Roosevelt plunging through the storm to aid the stricken Antiope. It was Upton who also maintained signal contact with Evans on board the Antiope during these four howling nights when only the blinking dots and dashes from Evans' tiny flashlight assured the officers and men of the Roosevelt that the starving, half-frozen and helpless seamen were clinging with a last desperate hope to the battered hulk that had been their proud ship.

WASHINGTON SPECIALS

Washington, March 9.—(UP.)

The government's chain of evidence tightened today around Daniel J. Shields, representative of the Johnstown, Pa., Brewery Company and Major James F. Johnson, former special counsel, for the litigation division of the prohibition unit.

The men are on trial under an indictment charging conspiracy to defraud the United States by the issuance of a permit for the Johnstown company to manufacture beer and for attempting allegedly to bribe prohibition officers.

E. C. Yellowley, former head of the prohibition division, Elmer L. Irey, of the special intelligence unit, Burt W. Andrews and W. E. Dunigan, operators, were called to the stand to testify for the prosecution.

Control of the Virginian Railway, one of the major coal carrying roads, by the Norfolk & Western was opposed today by the state of Virginia on the grounds that it would give virtual control of the West Virginia coal fields to the Norfolk & Western. The C. & O. railroad should be permitted to acquire the Virginian railway, the Interstate Commerce Commission was told by the corporation commission of Virginia in a brief filed today. The merger of the Virginian and the C. & O. properties was suggested by the commission in its tentative plan of railroad consolidation.

The Erie Railroad today applied to the Interstate Commerce Commission for permission to issue $2,190,000 equipment trust certificates bearing 4½ per cent interest for purchase of additional rolling stock. The Erie plans to purchase two locomotives and 124 new coaches at a total cost of $2,747,627.

Shortly after Chairman Borah of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had voiced in the Senate today a defense of the Mexican government, the state department this afternoon revealed it had instructed Ambassador Sheffield to use his good offices in mitigating Mexican deportation of American religious teachers.

Wets and dries staged a turbulent debate in the senate today over propaganda issued by both sides. Senator Bruce, Maryland, wet Democrat, started the exchange when he read results of newspaper polls showing an overwhelming majority for light wines and beer. Senator Willis, Republican, Ohio, retorted he had tons of dry propaganda in his desk, and would unload it into the record unless wets stopped their practice of putting newspaper stories into the record.

President Coolidge, through his spokesman, today decided to discuss the proposed Great Lakes to the Sea canal, referring questioners to his last message to congress which mentioned the project. In the message, the president pointed out that a joint commission of Canada and the United States were studying plans for this project and that any action on the project must be under treaty. He characterized all waterways development as an "important adjunct to commerce."

Farm Societies Have Weaknesses

Every Director Must Feel That He Has Accepted Position of Trust.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the serious weaknesses of many agricultural co-operatives is the tendency of members of boards of directors to shirk responsibility in the matter of management.

"Too frequently," says the United States Department of Agriculture, "the individual member looks upon his elevation to the office of director merely as a recognition of his standing in the community. Such an attitude is unfortunate and until every director comes to feel that he has accepted a trusteeship for the successful conduct of the business, co-operative enterprises will fall of attaining the full measure of success they wish to achieve."

Every Director Obligated.

This trusteeship, say the department, obligates every director to inform himself thoroughly respecting the operations of the business with which he has become vitally connected. In addition he will need to understand fully the broader principles upon a thorough working knowledge of which depends, to a large extent, the degree of success and progress of the business.

"If lack of interest is a weakness," says a department economist, "the wrong kind of interest is equally bad. Too frequently one finds the board interfering instead of directing. It is the duty of the board to formulate policies and to see that these policies are carried out by the executives. Dictation by the board of the petty detail of day to day operation is not 'formulating policies.' It is interference. Such interference can only result in unstable and unsatisfactory management."

Unwise Management.

Probably the most frequent cause of unwise management, he points out, is a lack of essential facts, or if these be at hand, an unwillingness to face the facts. To the extent that the board of directors makes a real effort to understand the demand for its products, and to formulate price and merchandising policies on the basis of all the facts, rather than on the basis of mere opinion, he says, will its activities contribute to whatever measure of success is achieved.

Opinion That Silage Is Not Fit Food for Bulls

The opinion that silage is not a fit feed for bulls that are heading herds prevails quite generally.

Whenever a sire becomes impotent one of the first questions asked is: "Do you give him silage?" This has led many to fear the feed like poison, far as the bull is concerned.

In view of this the experience of Prof. W. J. Fraser, head of the department of dairy husbandry of Illinois College of Agriculture, is enlightening. Professor Fraser says: "I have fed Holstein bulls 40 pounds of silage a day with no serious result in any way, when they were worked night and morning on the tread power. I think the amount of silage that can be fed depends entirely upon the amount of exercise the bull gets. If he stands around all the time the silage should be limited, or he will get too large in the barrel and too logy."

To Exclude Fruit Stock

The Department of Agriculture has indicated that it will confirm the recommendations made last summer by nurserymen and horticulturists to restrict the importation of fruit and rose stocks. In making these recommendations the nurserymen's statement includes the suggestion that the members of the association should heartily co-operate with the American growers of seedling fruit stocks and rose stocks in their efforts to organize and develop production to the extent that it may be reasonably depended upon as an adequate source of supply.

Plowing Under Clover

There are various opinions as to the best time for plowing under sweet clover. Some think it is best to let it grow until late April or May before plowing under. One will get more value out of sweet clover to plow it early in the spring before growth has started. Its fertilizing value at this time is mostly in the roots and quite deep in the ground. After growth has been made by late April, the clover has about the same fertilizing value.

Benefits of Mulching

Mulch for strawberry beds serves four important purposes, viz: (1) Preventing alternate freezing and thawing in late spring or when the winters are open. (2) It keeps down the weeds between the rows. (3) It conserves moisture, and the berries need all they can get at time of ripening. (4) It prevents the fruit from being soiled or splashed with sand or earth at the time the fruit is ripening.

New Males Each Year

Many poultrymen follow the practice of obtaining new male birds each year. They will trade their own males for inferior ones just for the sake of introducing new blood. Such a practice is entirely unnecessary and makes constructive breeding impossible. If your flock is giving satisfactory results, select and use the best male of your own raising.

ARRANGEMENTS

Under Way For Party For Benefit of Soldiers.

Nothing is to be left undone by the American Legion Auxiliary to make the house warming party which they have planned for the 9th of April at Memorial Hall, a wonderful success. The regular meeting of the Auxiliary was held Monday evening in the Post Room and plans were discussed but nothing in the way of definite plans were completed at this meeting because of the absence of Mrs. A. A. Parrett, the president, who has been confined to her home because of a serious attack of La grippe. In her absence, the meeting was presided over by Mrs. Chas. Smith, 1st vice president.

A letter was read to the Auxiliary from Mr. T. S. Pattison, commander of the Ross County Post in acknowledgement of the invitation extended to that Post by the local Post and Auxiliary, to the party which was a sample of the wonderful enthusiasm for which the Chillicotheans are noted. The letter was written from Grant hospital, Columbus, where the Major is convalescing from a recent operation.

Mrs. A. I. Cahill, as president of the Auxiliary in Ross County, also acknowledged the invitation very graciously and promised to co-operate with the local members in every way.

It was also announced at the meeting that a committee had called upon Mr. Jose Hedges and Mr. Albert Cromley, of Ashville, in regard to the date that a club from that village had set for a dance to be held here that would conflict with the date set by the Auxiliary and reported that their mission had been very successful. Both men had fully agreed to make other arrangements and to attend the party for the benefit of the soldiers.

This date having been set by the Auxiliary for some time it was also called to the attention of the Unit last evening that a dance scheduled by the C. A. C. for that date had been postponed for their benefit. This is very gratifying to the Legionnaires and members of the Unit who are working so hard to make this party one of the memorable events in the history of Circleville.

The tickets are now printed and can be secured from any member of the Auxiliary or Legion. They are for the very nominal price of 50 cents for which a whole evening's entertainment may be procured. The large Post Room which has been newly decorated, will be used for the card tables and the auditorium will be reserved for the dancers.

Make your plans to attend this celebration and assist those who are striving to help those who cannot help themselves—the ex-service men and their families.

RENDER PROGRAM

The Home Weekly, which is published at the O. S. & S. O. Home at Xenia, contains the program which was rendered at the dedication of the beautiful new school building which was recently completed at that institution. The program was rendered on Washington's Birthday. The visitors on that day included Mrs. Hugh Clark, of Steubenville, who represented the American Legion Auxiliary, and "Dusty" Rhoades, a representative of the American Legion who replaced Hugh L. Clark, the State Commander, who was unable to attend.

Misses Hanna McKenzie and Belle K. Huber, former residents of this city, are employees of that institution.

Unsightly Homes Disappear As Better Homes Campaign Progresses In United States

AN excellent "before and after" study is afforded by this house in Danville, Kentucky. The left hand picture shows the unsightly three-room house, with ugly surroundings, which was taken in hand by the Danville Better Homes in America committee and made into an attractive, livable, small home.

The central aim of Better Homes in America is to help American families of limited means to a knowledge of the ways in which they can make the most of their homes, from the standpoints of comfort, beauty, and utility.

This community—one of two thousand that took part in Better Homes Week in 1925—has

nished an excellent example of co-operation, local merchants contributing much of the material necessary to refurbish this run-down house and transform it to the condition shown in the right hand picture.

Not only materials, but labor as well, were donated to the Danville Better Homes committee, men with trucks from five local garages grading the grounds.

In furnishing the house, the committee kept strictly in mind the income limitations of a family that would occupy it, and the house was attractively furnished despite the rigid limitations on costs.

So much interest was aroused in this conditioned little house that 600 persons were registered as visitors during Better Homes Week last May. Danville's population is less than 6,000.

Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce, is president of Better Homes in America. Dr. James Ford is executive director and in active charge of the campaign.

Plans are already under way throughout the country for the Better Homes demonstrations of 1926, which will take place during the week of April 25 to May 1. While during 1925 two thousand cities, towns and rural communities took part in the demonstrations, representing every state in the Union and Alaska and Hawaii as well, it is probable that this number will be considerably surpassed in 1926.

FORECASTS ON NATIONAL GAME

(By Henry L. Farrel, United Press Staff Correspondent.)
St. Petersburg, Fla., March 9.—The New York Yankees are undergoing a process of thorough re-organization at their training camp here.

Such progress is being made that Miller Huggins already is willing to venture the opinion that he has the makings of a first division club this year while the players—particularly Babe Ruth—are certain they have such a team already.

The Babe, in better condition than he has been for years, thinks that the Yankees will be back in to the world's series after two years on the outside looking at the Washington Senators perform.

Huggins does not like to hear pennant talk around the training camp.

"Confidence is to be desired," Huggins said, "but it isn't well to feel too sure. We learned that during the last two years."

BANK BANDITS UNDER ARREST

Dayton, March 9.—(UP.)—Three men, suspected of an automobile theft arrested here early today were identified at noon as being the men who held up and robbed the Lockland, Ohio, bank last week.

Identification was made by the cashier and teller of the bank and by a young woman who witnessed the robbery.

The suspects gave their names as Carl Leheil, 21, of Middletown; Max A. Richardson, Hamilton, and Charles J. Bailey, 21, Middletown.

On the strength of the identification the prisoners will be turned over to the authorities from Lockland. All three deny connection with the robbery.

"WHITE METAL" HOAX IS UPSET BY TESTS

Bureau of Mines Finds Claims Unsubstantiated.

Washington. — The mysterious "white metal" which many mineral prospectors in the West consider to have strange properties of hardening iron and steel when heated in contact with those materials, has no existence in fact, states the bureau of mines, Department of Commerce, following repeated experiments with purported specimens of metal submitted for examination.

There is a legend that Mexicans and other old settlers in the southwest knew of an "ore" which was packed around pieces of iron and steel that they wished to harden. The metal was heated in a wood fire in contact with the "ore" and then quenched in water. Axes of springless wagons so treated were said to have been made "glass hard" and to wear two or three times as long as ordinary axes, and tires so treated were described as "ringing like a bell" when suspended and struck with a hammer. This action was said to be due to a "white metal" that was extracted from the "ore" and alloyed with the iron by the treatment.

The tests by the bureau and other laboratories, following the claimants' procedures, usually have shown no hardening effect, although in a few tests some hardening of iron or steel was produced due either to case hardening from heating the metal in contact with carbon, protected from oxidation by a coating of flux, or in some instances to the formation of a crude silicon alloy. Many ordinary fusible rocks, and even fluxes without rock, will give these same results.

The bureau of mines is forced to conclude, therefore, that the various unsubstantiated claims that have been made were due to careless tests, to erroneous conclusions from these tests, or to an attempt to defraud.

The Golden Legend

It was in 1851 that the poet Longfellow published "The Golden Legend," a long lyric drama based on the German Hartmann von Aue's beautiful story of self-sacrifice, "Der Alme Heinrich." It is one of Longfellow's best and the most popular of his longer works, and contains many passages of great beauty.

HONOR HEROIC INDIAN WOMAN

Ask Government for Monument to Sacajawea, Who Guided Lewis, Clark.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Neglected, on a bleak plain in Wyoming, lies the grave of the Indian girl Sacajawea whose guidance enabled President Jefferson's expedition under Lewis and Clark to blaze a trail to the Pacific and make known the vast riches of our Northwest territory. Representative Winter, who has written a book about her, has asked the federal government to appropriate money enough to mark the grave of this Shoshone whose service was not less devoted though less celebrated, than that of Pocahontas.

Sacajawea saved the explorers from being wiped out by redmen, piloted them from midcontinent to the sea with a papoose on her back, gave her hands to buy them furs against the cold, rescued their instruments, records and supplies from the rapids where they had capsized—yet never was rewarded or recognized except by a monument at Portland and one at Bismarck. For his part in the guiding and interpreting her French husband, Charbonneau, received but $500. Long afterward Captain Clark sent a message to Charbonneau, saying: "Your woman who accompanied you on that long, dangerous and fatiguing route to the Pacific ocean and back deserved a greater reward for her attention and services on the route than we had in our power to give her at the Mandans (Fort Mandan)." Beaten by Charbonneau.

Charbonneau, just of all, appreciated her intelligence, resourcefulness and pluck, as, carrying her papoose, she retraced the path into the mountains which she had traversed as a captive five years before. He was jealous of her instinctive sense of direction, which threatened to rob him of the glory he wanted for himself as guide. In the Lewis and Clark journals there is a note by Captain Clark, made on August 14, 1805, which says: "I checked our interpreter for striking his woman at their dinner." Sacajawea accepted her lot with placidity and humility. She was, after all, privileged, in her own estimation, to be the wife of a white man. As a child of ten she had been separated from her people, the Shoshones, when they were attacked by their ancient foes, the Minnetarees or Blackfeet. She had been yanked up on a horse by one of them and with nine other boys and girl prisoners carried from her home on the Snake river in Idaho, eastward over the Bitter Root (Rocky) mountains into Dakota land.

Save for her friend, Otter Woman, Sacajawea (meaning Bird Woman) was the only one who continued in captivity. The others escaped one night when the guard was asleep. Sacajawea might have fled, too, had not Otter Woman slept so soundly. Roughly and suddenly awakened, Otter Woman screamed in fright, and this aroused the Blackfeet.

A Gambling Stake.
In the lodge of Red Arrow, her captor, and his wife, Sacajawea became content. She grew to love them—and also a Mandan lad. But when Red Arrow lost her in a gambling bet with Charbonneau, a French trader, she was compelled to leave the Arrows and dwell with Charbonneau. He forbade her to marry the Mandan and after the death of his wife married her himself. Sacajawea had never opposed a dominant force. It was not until the advent of more white men that loyalty to them gave her sufficient strength to assert herself.

Snowbound in the Mandan village (near the present site of Bismarck), Captains Lewis and Clark sought a guide and interpreter to lead them to the coast. Charbonneau, after promising his service, accepted a more lucrative offer from some traders. But the explorers had won the interest of Sacajawea. They were bound in the direction of her people, and Charbonneau had given his word. Why was he so perverse?

For the first time in her life Sacajawea allowed her black eyes to flash in anger. She told Charbonneau that he had no word of honor, that unless he let her apologize for him to Long Knife and Red Hair (Lewis and Clark) she would—yes, she would destroy herself and Batiste, the son born that winter.

Charbonneau then agreed that he would keep his word. Ecstatically she tripped on her beaded moccasins to the tent of Long Knife and Red Hair to impart the news. They laughed and told her she was a clever girl. From that moment she could hardly wait for the river ice to break that they might proceed westward in their canoes. The explorers were just as anxious to meet the Shoshones as was the Indian girl, for they afforded the only possibility of procuring horses to complete the journey to the coast.

After a hazardous course the party reached the Great falls of the Missouri, where they were nearly drowned. While admiring the falls, a dark cloud arose. They entered a ravine for refuge. When the cloud burst the water mounted to Captain Clark's waist. He pushed Sacajawea—who was carrying her papoose on her back—up a cliff, climbing to safety after her as the water sprang up fifteen feet behind him.

Once Sacajawea, then only twenty, fell ill. Through forbidding caverns and dangerous currents she had finally come to—the valley of the shadow—Captain Clark sent his black servant York, to nurse her. With a sympathetic skill he slowly guided the Indian girl back to the paths of health.

She soon had the privilege of repaying Red Hair. When her husband allowed his boat to tip, so that the incoming water washed overboard many records and packages of camp stores, she sprang into the stream to recover them. Captain Lewis, seeing the accident from the shore, feared for her on account of the treacherous state of the water. Risking her life and that of her baby, she retrieved the supplies. For her heroic act, which made it unnecessary to retrace hundreds of miles to replenish supplies, the captains agreed to name the next creek after her, Sacajawea.

Found the Right Pass.
Her main service to the explorers and to posterity was performed when, in a labyrinth of the Bitter Root mountains, recognizing the route she had been hurried over as a captive she pointed out the right pass to the coast. Through dark, narrow portions of the Missouri they plied their paddles, canyons on either side letting in rifts of light, odors of pine and the roar of waterfalls.

"We are coming to a country where the river has three forks," said Sacajawea.

And they did. Only July 25 they arrived near the present site of Gallatin. At this point, where all Indian trails converged, where the roads were worn with the lodgepoles of Indian hunters, Sacajawea recognized the camping ground of her own people by its green valleys, sunflowers and wild rye. Here was the fork up which she had run to hide from the Minnetarees. Here they would meet the Shoshones and obtain horses.

Captain Lewis went ahead, eager to find a Shoshone. Presently one approached on horseback. But when he espied the explorer he whirled about to warn his tribesmen that the Blackfeet were returning. Lewis was dismayed. The Shoshones would either abandon their grounds or in revenge for past mistreatment rally for war.

White Men in Danger.
Lewis beckoned to Sacajawea. The red men were approaching, she would have to interpret. She was joyously prouetting up the river shore, waving her arms, kissing her fingers. Up rode the chief of the Shoshones. Beholding him, Sacajawea threw her blanket over him and burst into tears. It was Camenah, her own brother.

Sacajawea learned that the remainder of her family had been slain by the Minnetarees, but that her sister had left a little boy. Having established an understanding between her people and the white captains, she told her brother he could secure his tribe against the onsets of the Blackfeet by exchanging his horses for the guns of the explorers.

Camenah agreed. But no sooner was he in possession of the weapons than he decided he needed his horses, too. Sacajawea informed him that he couldn't have his pie and eat it. The Shoshone chief explained that he could. He had already sent for reinforcements to the surrounding tribes. The white men were defenseless; they could be killed and the horses regained.

The distressed squaw tried to dissuade her wily brother from that course. It would be to his advantage to befriend the explorers, she argued, because they were making a trail for other white men, who would bring more guns to kill the Blackfeet. Camenah would not wait. The Blackfeet must die now; so must the white men.

Once again Sacajawea's natural submissiveness was overpowered by her fidelity to her new white friends. With bowed head she bared her brother's plans to Red Hair. Then, womanlike, she modified the reprimand which Captain Clark asked her to interpret to Camenah. She also tactfully padded the chief's apology.

Another difficulty now presented itself. Charbonneau refused to continue further on the journey. He could only foresee Indian attacks and starvation further west. Sacajawea would not desert the white men; no, not even to abide with her people; Charbonneau had promised to take them to the Everywhere-Salt-Water and must do so.

Their subsequent encounters with Indians were, thanks to her presence, amicable. No squaw ever traveled with a war party, and Sacajawea and her papoose, seeing the world over his mother's shoulder, were such a pleasant picture that the Indian women everywhere gathered about them with interest.

Their destination was reached on November 14, 1805. They spent the winter at Fort Clatsop by the sea in comfortable cabins. Batiste, the papoose, could now be untied from his elkskin cradle to toddle on the puncheon floor. Sacajawea, crooning an Indian monotone, helped Charbonneau with the cooking.

One day the camp heard a whale had come ashore. Captain Clark appointed twelve men to be ready before daylight for the jaunt over Tillamook head to see it. Sacajawea was eager to accompany them. But Charbonneau wishing her to attend to the "papais" (roasting meats on a stick), told the captain "she ought not to go." Returning, he informed her that the captain said you cannot go.

Sacajawea wouldn't accept the decision. She had spoken much for the captain, why not now for herself? "Captinne," she said to Clark, "you remember w'en we reach de rivers and you know not which to follow, I show de country and point de stream. Again w'en my husband could not spik, I spik for you. Now, Captinne,

I travel great way to see de Beeg Water. I climb de mountain an' help de boat on de rapide. An' now dis monstrous fish haf come—"

Sacajawea was irresistible. Next morning she was ready before any of them. On Tillamook Head she first saw the Everywhere-Salt-Water, flinging its waves over the Tillamook rock.

In the spring the party started on the back track, Sacajawea leading the way through the Rockies (via Bozeman pass) on her little pony. When they came again to the Mandan country Captain Clark invited her and Charbonneau to visit the white man's land. Sacajawea yearned to go, but Charbonneau declined.

Thus ended the services of the little Indian maid to exploration. For 100 years she was all but forgotten, until, at the Lewis and Clark centennial in Portland, Ore., in 1905, Clark's diary references to her were verified and a statue was erected to her. Another was set up at Bismarck, N. D. "But these are only local monuments," said Representative Winter. "Sacajawea deserves recognition from the general government."

Some years ago a controversy arose as to whether the Sacajawea who was buried in 1884 in the Wind River cemetery was the Sacajawea of the Lewis and Clark expedition. Conducting an investigation, Dr. Grace Raymond Hebard of the University of Wyoming, and, later, Dr. Charles A. Eastman of the Indian bureau at Washington, verified the fact. Rev. John Roberts of the Shoshone reservation, to which Sacajawea had returned after her husband's death, testified that he, among others, remembered her. She had died at Shoshone agency, was one hundred years old, and "spoke excellent French."—New York Times.

FOLLOW THE CROWD

Some firms advertise by mailing circulars. Pickaway County has about 5,000 homes. Circulars mailed to each home costs the sender about $150.

Money spent in this manner must be added to the overhead expense and the customer pays that expense.

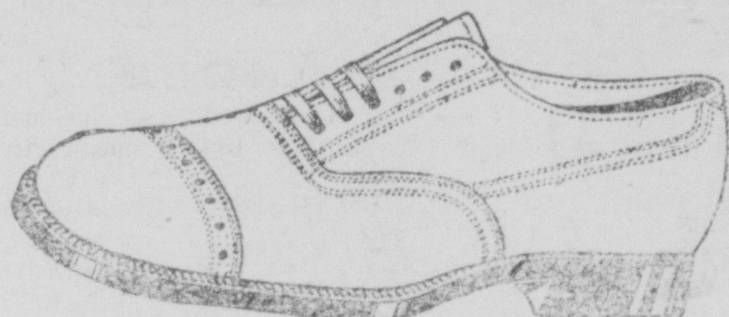

The Circleville Welding Co.'s policy has always been to reduce expense and give the customer the benefit of the saving. Having been in business for the past six years we need no introduction. All the leading industries of Circleville and the many surrounding towns have their work done here. Why not you. We don't do a cheap job merely to meet competition but do you a real 100 percent job at as a reasonable price as possible.

Welding and brazing is our business, nothing else. Bring your next job here and compare the difference in workmanship.

IF YOU HAVE A DAUGHTER

Did you ever stop to think what effect the furnishings of your daughter's bed room will have upon her? Make her room so attractive that she will want to stay at home, and will want her girl friends to come and see her room.

We have a beautiful six piece bed room suite that would make a very attractive suite for a young lady's room. It is far more attractive than the one shown above. We have no picture of the one we have in mind. The suite consists of bed, vanity, low-boy, bench, rocker, and night-table. It is made of Wild Cherry veneers in combination with other woods. The finish is known as Blistered Cherry. It is very beautiful and we want you to come and see it. The price? We almost forgot about that.

All six pieces for less than $300—$285.00, to be exact with a discount of $14.25, if you pay cash. We have but one suite in Cherry and cannot promise delivery of any more within four months. That's how well this suite is selling elsewhere. So, don't delay, but come in right away and order it sent out for the daughter's room.

BROTHERHOOD MEETING.
The Ashville Brotherhood was royally entertained by Trinity Lutheran Brotherhood Tuesday evening, March 9, in the social room of the church. After the devotional and business meetings an excellent buffet lunch, prepared by Mr. Daniel Eitel and ten able assistants, was enjoyed by the 150 present. At this time the meeting was turned over to George Griffith, toastmaster, for the evening. Mr. Griffith introduced Karl Hermann whose subject was, "Telling the People What They Ought to Know." Mr. Hermann having made a study of advertising gave some excellent pointers along this line.

Next was a vocal selection by Christian Schwarz. Elmer Wolf then challenged anyone in either of the brotherhoods for a debate on any subject. John Goeller Jr., accepted the challenge, choosing the subject and taking the negative; Resolved, "That the Old Lady who lived in the Shoe was justified in spanking her children and putting them to bed hungry."

While the debaters were preparing their notes for the debate a duet was rendered by Gladden Troutman and George Himrod. The debate followed resulting in negative two votes and affirmative one.

Another vocal selection by Ed. Ebert. The next speaker Ed. Sensenbrenner, took for his subject "Praise." The climax of the entertainment came with an address, "Failures and how to Avoid Them," by Rev. Mr. Glick, of Ashville.

The next regular meeting will be held Thursday, March 18.

Precocious Sarcasm
Mrs. John T. Pratt, New York's first aldewoman, told a Christmas story at a dinner party.
"A young father and mother," she said, "were hard up last Christmas so they bought their little son a rather cheap lot of presents.
"When he came into the sitting room and saw his presents on Christmas morning he said nothing—just studied them over, one by one, coldly and silently.
"Well, little man," said his father, "what have you got to say for all these beautiful, lovely, splendid presents that Santa Claus has brought you?"
"The little man thought a minute. Then he said:
"God bless the 5 and 10-cent store!"

One of the Two Seats
By DOROTHY DOUGLAS
(Copyright.)

"MOTHER, I think I'm too disgusting the way these people flock to the tennis tournaments. I have tried all over London and can't get a single seat for the finals, and it's one of the reasons I chose to come here for my holidays—I did so want to see Lenglen and Miss McKane and Miss Ryan and all the bunch of champions at Wimbledon."

"There, there, dearie," consoled her mother, "I have tried to get a word in edgewise and tell you that I have just found in the Personal column—I always read the personals, they are so amusing—one which offers two seats for sale for the games."

"Oh, mother, shall I dash straight off to get them? You will come, too, won't you?"

"Now, Molly, you know I would pass right on if I had to sit through a tennis match in a crowd of several thousands."

So Molly rushed off to the first taxi she saw and on to the address of a flat in Upper Brook street in quest of the ticket.

Arriving there and being admitted she found that the young man who had got there one minute before her had the tickets in his hand and was even then producing the necessary two pounds.

"Oh," wailed Molly, looking straight into the young man's blue eyes. "I've come all the way from America to see one of these great games and now I can't get a single seat."

"I say, that's rotten luck. Here, you have one of these. One is all I want."

He told the yarn easily. She drew a pound from her neat bag and took the ticket with a smile that sank to the very depths of the young man's heart. Also with American frankness she held out a slim hand and colored slightly at the warm pressure it received as she tried to thank him.

Molly felt she could hardly wait until the day she dressed her prettiest to go to Wimbledon.

Her heart sank down into her very dainty boots when, upon finally reaching her seat in the center court, she found that what she had been hoping was not to be. There was no nice young man with blue eyes beside her, but a young lady whose attitude as Molly sat down was not in the least cordial.

Molly realized that this was the other of the two seats, for on her left side was a large party of some eight or ten, so the aristocratic young lady must be the friend of the very nice young man.

"I'm so sorry," she said with appealing friendliness, "that I took this seat—the gentleman who had it told me he only wanted one, and now I know he gave it up. I wish I could get it back to him. I believed him when he said he didn't want it."

Lady Sybel Hove looked frankly at Molly. "My brother would say that," she told her. "He has been looking forward to seeing this set for months, but he said he would edge in somewhere. Please don't feel so badly," she added swiftly for Molly looked so distressed that Sybel's heart smote her. "A man can always make his way in."

Half an hour later when the greatest of world tennis champions were hard at play on the courts, Lady Sybel and Molly were clutching each other in excitement and munching chocolates alternately.

When the exciting games were over and the thousands of good-natured people swarming to the various exit gates, Lady Sybel turned to Molly.

"You will come for a cup of tea, won't you? Jack will be delighted to have a chat with you. He and I are taking a long trip over to your country this autumn and you must tell us all about what to see."

Molly blushed shyly and accepted happily.

There was no slightest doubt as to Lord Hove's delight when he realized that Sybel had succeeded in what he hoped, without having asked her, she would do. She had become acquainted with the girl whose green eyes he had not been able to forget since they had gazed into his own.

The second meeting was even more wonderful than the first and no one looking at Molly and Lord Hove could think anything save that they were suddenly, desperately and most happily in love. Sybel saw it right away and wondered what color her bridesmaid's gown would be.

And when the great ocean liner nosed into the dock in New York a scant month later the photographers were all there to snap the arriving bridegroom and the bridesmaid as they met the bride.

Would Lord Hove, or would he not, kiss his bride-to-be?

That was what the newspaper men wondered.

All the Sunday editions would tell the answer—one way or the other.

Food of Ostriches
Ostriches are by nature herbivorous. On ostrich farms the birds are usually pastured on alfalfa in the summer and fed alfalfa hay, wheat bran, barley, oats and corn in the winter. Of course they require grit. Ostriches are notorious for their voracious appetite for stones, gravel, granite and pieces of bone. They have been known to swallow pocketbooks, spectacle cases, watches and other similar objects. As a rule they do not care for flesh of any kind unless real hungry.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Bubbles Indicate Leak
Air bubbles seen in the radiator solution indicate some sort of cylinder head gasket leak. The bubbles are the result of compression leaking out around the head and getting into the cooling system. This air, being under pressure, naturally finds its way to the surface of the water in the radiator.

AMUSEMENTS

"A new Marion Davies," tersely describes the artistry of that charming star in her later stellar production, "Lights of Old Broadway," directed by Monta Bell, and now playing at the Met theater.

Beginning with her production of "Little Old New York," it may be rightly said that each succeeding production has been another step upward in the career of this artist in "Lights of Old Broadway," which tops by a considerable margin "Little Old New York" Miss Davies has attained a stellar position which will command the respect and admiration of the great American picture-going public.

In this picture she plays the dual role of Fely, foster daughter of the lowly O'Tandys, and Anne, adopted daughter of the rich and aristocratic De Rhondos—roles as far divergent as far as the poles, yet she interprets them with ease and clarity.

The writer of this article has followed the career of Miss Davies from its inception and has noted that her histrionic greatness has always been as great as the vehicle in which she has appeared. If Miss Davies, under her new contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is given stories with the strength of her initial picture under that banner, it is most likely she will soon top all other feminine stars of the screen.

She carries herself thru all scenes with the ease and naturalness of a born artist. There is nothing forced nor anything artificial about her work and without doubt she is the most beautiful of all American girls now connected with stage or screen life.

Great as the credit due Miss Davies in "Lights of Old Broadway" is, we should not miss the opportunity of speaking of Monta Bell's clever direction and the well-knit scenario made from Laurence Eyre's stage success, "The Merry Wives of Gotham" by Carey Wilson.

Credit should be given to the supporting cast, especially her leading man, Conrad Nagel and Frank Currier who plays the role of Col. Lambert De Rhondo. Others who deserve especial mention are George K. Arthur, Charles McHugh, Eleanor Lawson, Julia Swayne Gordon, Mathew Betz and Wilbur Higby.

x HARTMAN THEATER. x
x x x x x x x x

"The Student Prince" the most sumptuous operetta ever produced by the Messrs. Shubert and considered the crowning musical achievement of a decade, will begin a week's engagement at the Hartmen theater, Columbus, Monday night, March 8, at 8:15. It will be remembered that when this fascinating musical play was presented here earlier in the season an extra matinee had to be given to accommodate the crowds wishing to witness it.

The company that will present the operetta is the Chicago cast and chorus which has been playing at the Great Northern theater for more than a year and is headed by Dixon Frasier, the well known tenor in the role of the prince, and Eileen Van Biene, popular prima-donna in the role of Kathie. Other well known artists in the cast are Eddie Garvie, Patricia Ann Manners, Georgie Mack Evelyn Darville, Walter McNally, Ann Carey, Otis Sheridan, Charlotte Granville, Walter Tenny, James Phillips, Clyde Moffet, John Goldsworthy, Timothy Daley, James Murray and others of note. The famous male chorus and the charming altos and sopranos all go to make up an organization of more than 125 trained singers.

It will be recalled that the story is about the young Prince Karl Franz, who is sent away to Heidelberg for a year of study, only to be recalled to Karlsburg and the throne upon the untimely death of his aged grandfather, the king. In the meanwhile he has fallen in love with Kathie, a pretty waitress at the Inn of the Three Golden Apples, and altho his troth is pledged to the Princess Margaret Alexis, his cousin, whom he eventually marries, he never forgets Little Kathie, and in one of the sweetest and most touching scenes ever written, he goes back to the Inn looking for the sweetheart of his student days, but finds she is engaged to wed another. The thrilling, soul-stirring musical score by Sigmund Romberg has never been equalled.

Matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday afternoon at 2:15. Mail orders now.

No Theaters in Java

In Java there are no theaters to speak of, and entertainments that call for an auditorium usually are given in large concert halls, the performances opening at 9:30 or 10 o'clock, because it is too warm prior to that hour to ask an audience to assemble. The concert halls are connected to clubs usually.

Great Writer's Nickname

The name "Great Unknown" was given by James Ballantyne to Sir Walter Scott, the author of the Waverly novels, which, although published anonymously, attained great popularity. Speculation was long rife as to the authorship of these romances; but it was not until the failure of Scott's publishers in 1825 that the secret finally was made known.—Exchange.

MUSEUM IS ESTABLISHED WHERE CZAR WAS SLAIN

Bloodstained Room Where Royal Family Was Murdered Preserved by Soviet Government.

Sverdlovsk, Siberia.—The Bolshevik government has converted the house in which the emperor and empress of Russia and their family were murdered into an historical museum. Part of the building now is a small Communist "university." The former dining room of the imperial family has become a reading room, where scores of proletarian students pore over newspapers and scientific books.

In the basement is the blood-stained bullet-pierced room in which the royal family were killed. It has been preserved as an "historical reminder, of the just fate that befell the autocrat of all the Russias."

A section of the floor is torn up, the Kolchak troops having, it is said, attempted to remove traces of the crime. Visitors are told that after the murder, white soldiers washed the floor and distributed the suds to the clergy, "priests having waited for hours in long lines for their share of the water containing their former imperial master's blood."

Visitors must have special permission. Some Americans recently were refused entrance on the ground that foreign visitors had written matter hostile to the Bolshevik regime.

Outside the house, which overlooks the "Square of National Vengeance," is a marble pedestal on which stands a headless statue of Karl Marx. The statue was "beheaded" by Kolchak's troops in 1918.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE

Having Tea With Kate

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

SATURDAY luncheon had consisted of very, very thin soup, with a few very small croutons—and there wasn't much in the plates, either. Then there had been midget fish balls—one to a person—short rations of bread and butter—plenty of pickles, weak tea and—that was all. Roderick Hemstead, who occupied one of the front rooms on the second floor of the fine old-fashioned house had come home early, in time for luncheon, and intended to spend the afternoon working over some papers from the office. He had dropped in for luncheon, to which he was certainly entitled since he paid full board. Nora Lane was home, too, though on school days she bought her luncheon at a little tear-room near the school where she taught.

Now Roderick sat in his room considering his papers, but much more seriously considering how hungry he was. He'd go out and get some afternoon tea if it wasn't such an infernal nuisance. And he didn't even have a cracker in his room. Nora had been correcting papers, but it seemed now as if she couldn't correct another unless she had something to eat.

Starvation fare—that's what it was at Mrs. Miller's boarding house.

Just then came a curious timid sort of scratching noise on Nora's door. "It's me," said a voice, as Nora opened to see an oldish woman in a blue gingham dress. Nora knew at once that this was Katie, the cook, though she had seen her only a few times. Students came in to serve the meals—and this Mrs. Miller considered a great advantage since you never had to feed them. And Mrs. Miller and Katie and poor timorous Mr. Miller did the rest.

"I thought maybe you'd come to the kitchen for a cupful of tea," suggested Katie. "Lunch was none too hearty." She laughed a little and waited for Miss Lane to accept her invitation. "You see Mrs. Miller is away. Won't possibly be back until after dinner tonight. I always have my tea and toast at four, and I thought I'd see if there was anyone in that would like some."

So Nora Lane, feeling as guilty as a child about to pilfer the pantry, followed the broad-backed Katie to the kitchen below. Steps on the back stairs following them proved to be those of Roderick Hemstead, who sat across the dining room from Nora. She knew his name, thought him very good looking, and that was about all. "This young gentleman was working in his room," explained Katie. "I knew that meal would never last him through the afternoon."

Katie was now setting tea cups and saucers and spoons on the immaculate white oilcloth top of her kitchen table.

A half-hour had passed when Nora and Roderick groped their way up the back stairs.

"Wasn't it fun?" asked Nora.

"You bet," said Roderick.

"And it isn't as if we weren't entitled to the things, either," defended Nora. "We both pay full board and we are hardly ever here for luncheon. Wouldn't Mrs. Miller have a fit?"

"That's what makes it such good sport. Wish I sat on the same side of the dining room that you do."

"Why?" asked Nora, also glad of the dark.

"Guess why," said Roderick, for they were now in the light of the upstairs hall and Roderick didn't dare say more.

Frequently that winter Mrs. Miller had engagements on Saturday afternoon and for some reason Katie always found her young man and her young lady, as she called them, in their rooms, ready to be asked to a kitchen tea party.

Then came the final kitchen tea party, to which Roderick and Nora came looking so confused and self-conscious that Katie felt sure that Roderick had stolen a kiss on the back stairs. Never was a tea party more delightful, and Katie was in rare good humor. Perhaps they were too preoccupied. Anyway they did not hear the footsteps of the ample Mrs. Miller coming through the pantry.

"Katie," she shrieked, "what do you mean by this? How dare you? I discharge you on the spot!"

Katie and Nora looked helplessly at each other and Roderick, who had risen, bowed slightly to his landlady. "Let me explain," he said. "We have been making arrangements—Miss Lane and I—with Katie to come and keep house for us. But perhaps I had better explain. Miss Lane and I are engaged. We shall settle in our own home immediately after our wedding." Nora blushed and nodded an affirmative to the bewildered Katie.

"How dare you conspire to get my cook away from me, right here in my own house?" shrieked Mrs. Miller.

"That's just it. As a matter of fact we hadn't spoken of the matter to her. We were going to. But we felt a little reticent about making advances here, as you say, in your own house. But since you have already discharged Katie, of course we need no longer feel any such scruples. Katie, do you accept our offer?"

Katie said she did. And there was a decided coolness between Mrs. Miller, her cook, and two of her best-paying boarders until the three last named left two days later.

Lesson for March 14

THE LAST WORDS OF JESUS WITH HIS DISCIPLES

LESSON TEXT—John 14:1-31.
GOLDEN TEXT—"I am the way, the truth and the life."—John 14:6.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Tells of the Heavenly Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Wonderful Promises of Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Counsels and Confers with His Disciples.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Christ's Last Words With His Disciples.

The hopes of the disciples were utterly shattered when Jesus told them about the cross. He had told them that He was going away and they could not follow Him. Their hearts were flooded with grief. He consoled them by—

I. Pointing to the Reunion in the Father's House (vv. 1-3).

1. He Asked Them to Trust in Him Even as God (v. 1).

Faith in the God man Christ Jesus will steady the heart no matter how intense the grief, nor how great the sorrow.

2. He Informed Them That He Was Going to the Father's House in Heaven to Prepare a Home for Them (v. 2).

He assured them that there was abundant room for all. Heaven is an eternal dwelling place. Only those can enter who have made the necessary preparation here.

3. He Assured Them That He Would Come Again and Escort Them to Heaven (v. 3).

Jesus will not wait for His own to come to Him, but will come and call forth from the grave those who have died and transform living believers and take them all to be with Himself in the heavenly home forever more.

II. Revealing the Way to the Father's House (vv. 4-11).

Jesus informed the disciples that they knew the place and the way to which He was going. To this Thomas interposed a doubt, in answer to which Christ asserts that He is—

1. The Way to God (v. 6).

He is more than a mere guide or teacher; He is the way itself. He is the door of the sheep fold; yea, the very entrance to the tree of life.

2. The Truth (v. 6).

He is not merely the teacher, but the Truth incarnate. In His incarnation the spiritual and material worlds were united. Therefore, every line of truth, whether spiritual or material, converges in Him. No one can ever have the real truth about anything who does not have Christ. In Him especially we have the truth about God. To pretend to know God, while at the same time rejecting Jesus Christ is utter folly. Only as Christ reveals God can man know Him (John 1:18).

3. The Life (v. 6).

Christ is not merely the giver of life, but He is the essence of life. Only those who receive Christ have life in the true sense. This is a truth which cannot be arrived at by intellectual processes. It is a mystery which can only be penetrated by faith.

III. Assuring Them That His Work Was to Continue (vv. 12-14).

Jesus' going away was not to end the work which He had begun. This no doubt means that through the ministry of the spirit-filled disciples the work which He had begun would assume larger proportions. After the Day of Pentecost the Gospel took a much wider range. During His ministry the message was confined to the Jews, while under the ministry of the disciples it was only limited by the world itself. The disciples' ministry was ushered in by the conversion of three thousand in one day.

IV. Promises Another Comforter (vv. 15-17).

The word "comforter" means literally one called to the side of another to give help, protection and deliverance. This comforter was the Holy Spirit. Jesus was the comforter while here in the body. The Holy Spirit was to be another comforter.

V. Assuring Them of His Return to Them (vv. 18-24).

Although Christ went away He did not leave His disciples as orphans. He is spiritually present with them always. The Father and the Son make their abode with the disciples who love and obey Jesus Christ.

VI. Assuring Them That the Holy Spirit Would Aid Them in Remembering and Understanding His Word (vv. 25, 26).

This the Holy Spirit does by illuminating the minds of the disciples.

VII. Giving the Legacy of His Peace (vv. 27-31).

By His peace is meant the serenity of soul which one enjoys who knows that his sins are forgiven.

Dependent Upon God

All men, whether they know it or not, are unconsciously dependent upon God, else no man could live out a day. The religious man is one who is aware of that truth, and who seeks by active choice and will to know and do the will of Him in whose great hand he stands.—Joseph Fort Newton.

Unkind Language

Unkind language is sure to reap the fruits of unkindness, that is, suffering in the bosom of others.

Statistics

Secretary Mellon at a Washington reception said of a sensational statistician:

"His figures are so amazingly precise that you incline to doubt them. He's like the sugar planter in Hawaii who took a tourist to the edge of a volcano and said:

"That crater, Dick, is just sixty thousand and two years old."

"And two!" said Dick, with a laugh.

"Where do you get the two?"

"I've been here two," said the planter. "It was sixty thousand when I came."

SEEKING WAY TO STOP LEAK OF ELECTRICITY

Engineering Foundation Research Agency Tells of World Study of Insulation.

New York.—A world study of insulation, to solve problems that have proved baffling since the beginning of the electrical era, is under way, it was announced here by the Engineering Foundation, research agency of the national societies of civil, mining, mechanical and electrical engineers.

The work is being directed by the research committee of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, one of the member societies of the foundation and of the National Research Council. The chairman is Prof. John B. Whitehead of Johns Hopkins university.

"Leakage of electric current from generators, motors and other kinds of equipment, from transmission lines and from wiring, and the kindred losses by short circuits and 'break-downs,' total a large value every year," said the foundation's announcement. "The higher the voltage, potential, pressure or tension (electrical engineers use all four terms) the greater the leakage.

"High voltages, however, offer great advantages in many uses of electricity, and so inventors and engineers are constantly trying to find means for using current at higher and higher voltages for transmitting power to great distances and for other purposes. But with high voltages leakage, short circuits and break-downs cause danger of fire, injury or death to persons, besides loss of current and wrecking of lines and machinery; hence a great deal of the energy devoted to improvement of electrical equipment of all sorts is directed toward the prevention or reduction of these troubles.

"Insulation is the general name applied to means for preventing or reducing the escape of electricity from the place of use or storage or from the intended channel of transmission to a place of lower voltage. Just as water goes down hill, electricity goes down voltage. Insulation is almost as various in form and nature as the uses to which electricity is put."

OLD FIDDLERS CONTEST WAS INTERESTING

Capacity Audience at C. A. C. Gym—Another Will be Held in Near Future.

The Old Fiddlers' contest staged at the C. A. C. Wednesday evening drew a capacity audience. Three hundred and fifty people paid admission.

The old tunes of younger days fell on the ears of the audience and brought back scenes that were dear to the heart. Airs long since almost forgotten that we used to enjoy at country dances on the old barn floor and in homes that have long since passed into discard. The old-time fiddlers made music worth while. "Turkey in the Straw," "Pop Goes the Weasel" and other old-time tunes which accompanied the ancient and funmaking hoe-down that used to be danced when we were boys. "Home, Sweet Home" was not played until midnight and then some of the boys and girls wanted to linger longer.

Scottiches, polkas, waltzes, quadrilles, lancers, Virginia reels, and all the old graceful dances that at one time were indulged in before the World war and then some.

The tinkling persuasive rhythm of the violin players made the audience long to dance before the contest was over. It is queer what old-time music will do. It fires the blood and makes you young again. This fact was proven when a number of the old iron gray haired sightseers just ached to get on the floor and trip the light fantastic. This, they were given a chance to do after so long a time.

Those who entered the contest were Frank Rodgers, Harry "Tug" Wilson, George Griffey, Clarence Melson, Walter Grant and Ed. Vandegriff, of this city; C. V. Harden, of Millersport; Wilbur Harden of Logan and F. A. Bradley, of Columbus.

The prize winners were: First, Edward Vandegriff, $20 suit of clothes, given by Rothman's department store; second, C. V. Harden, of Millersport, $10; third, F. A. Bradley, of Columbus, $5.

The prize for the best lady quadrille dancer went to Mrs. Ida Malone, who received a mahogany clock from Brunner's jewelry store.

The callers for the square dances, known as quadrilles were Emanuel Dresbach, Carl Porter and Charles Scott. Another contest is scheduled for the near future at the C. A. C.

SOCIAL CALENDAR

Announcement has been made of the marriage on February 13, 1926, at Richmond, Indiana, of Miss Eleanor Burbridge Brown, daughter of Mr. Frank A. Brown, to Mr. Ralph Peck Stitt, son of Mrs. Charles Stitt. The announcement came as a surprise to their many friends. The young couple are well known. The bride, the eldest daughter of Representative Brown, who resides near Clarksburg, attended the Columbus School for Girls and also Ohio State university at Columbus where she was a member of the Delta Delta Delta sorority. Mr. Stitt, the son of Mrs. Charles Stitt, of Clarksburg, is a student at Ohio State university.

Tuesday evening the Business & Professional Women's club held a social session in the club rooms. At six o'clock a delicious baked ham dinner was served by the chairmen of the refreshment and social committees and their assistants, to forty club members. The tables were beautifully decorated with St. Patrick colors, and a green candle and stick adorned the center of each table.

Before dinner Miss Helen E. Smell of Asbury college, Wilmore, Kentucky a guest of Mrs. Ida J. McCorkle, favored the club with several vocal selections. She was accompanied on the piano by Mrs. Annette Conyers.

Following the dinner hour several members having made previous engagements were obliged to leave, those remaining spent the evening playing bridge and other table games.

30 YEAR BONDS

Are Offered By Mellon In Financing Plan.

Washington, March 8.—An offering of $500,000,000 in 30-year bonds was announced today by Secretary Mellon in connection with the regular March financing program of the treasury.

The new bonds will bear interest of 3 1/4 per cent and are intended, with balances already on hand and the March tax receipts, to meet the retirement of almost $750,000,000 in outstanding loans, for further cash requirements until June; when further financing will be necessary.

This is the first issue of long term securities offered by the treasury in a year, and the interest rate is lower than on any government bond issued since before the war with the exception of the first Liberty bonds, which were wholly exempt from taxation.

The new bond issue will be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from federal, state and municipal taxation except as to estate or inheritance taxes and to federal income surtaxes.

Applications for the bonds will be received at federal reserve banks.

Commenting on the lower interest rate treasury officials today said it reflected merely the general market rates. It was pointed out that the rates of government bonds always have been fixed to conform to the general market.

The bonds will bear interest from March 15, maturing March 15, 1956, and are redeemable after March 15, 1946. They will be offered at 100 1/2 and the $615,000,000 in the treasury notes of series A-1926, maturing March 15, will be accepted in part payment but will not receive

Perfumery Used for Ages

All civilized people have used perfumes in one way or another, though one of the first uses was in the funeral rites. In ancient days perfumery was much more used than now and there were many ceremonies that were sacred in nature that called for the fine odors.
